THE NEW PLAYS

"Moonlight Mary" Puts Rose Stahl in the Shadow.

BY CHARLES DARNTON

To see a good comedienne go wrong is one of the saddest spectacles that the stage can offer. Now Rose Stahl is distinctive, isn't she? Her name means something to you? It remains for her to discover, at this time, how much she means to herself. With a sense of humor that places her far above womankind generally she is, apparently, hopelessly sentimental. This is the only explanation for her choice of such a play as "Moonlight Mary," in which she appeared last night at the Fulton Theatre.

Stage experiences should have taught Miss Stahl the danger of practicing self-sacrifice. This was all very well in "The Chorus Lady," with its stang-bang moments; and there were possibilities in "Maggie Pepper," cheap as it was, if not in "A Perfect Lady." But "Moonlight Mary" does nothing more than put a particularly bright star in the shadow. George V. Hobart, in his so-called comedy, has only succeeded in making the least of Miss Stahl. In the first act of the play she was compelled to let a country hack driver carry off the laughs; in the second act she did most of her acting behind the rail of a theatrical agency—a barrier which might have tried the courage of a Madama X; and the third act led to little else than a sister-for-sister scene that recalled "The Chorus Lady." Here Miss Stahl climbed up a fire-escape into the apartment of a young man who was quite all right except for a cold in the head, only to discover that the little sister who had left the little town to win fame as a New York actress was the wife of the "angel" who had put a few incidental thousands into the "production" so dear to Broadway. The one really funny situation given Miss Stahl was that in which she sat at the telephone and demanded to see the minister who had performed the ceremony. As for herself she was merely the humble author of a series of magazine stories called "Moonlight Mary" and a play that gave her an opportunity to hand out engagements to an underfed young actress and a very poor old actor who loved to talk of his days with Booth, Mansfield and Hearne.

HIS GOLDA'S CHASE FOR FAME LEADS TO HUNGER ILLNESS

But, Unlike Grand Opera, There's No Professional Jealousy in Vegetable Business.

Somewhere in the neighborhood of Providence, R. I., there is a fatted calf that will be killed to celebrate the return home of Mrs. Meyers Mendell and her daughter Golda, who twelve years ago left Papa Mendell to conquer the world.

They gave up the conquest last night, when Miss Mendell and her mother were taken from their furnished room at No. 26 West Forty-fifth Street to Bellevue Hospital, suffering from what at first appeared to be acute mania caused by lack of nourishing food. Mrs. Jennie Kirkbright, the landlady, found both women unconscious in their room.

When Mr. Mendell arrived at Bellevue Hospital this morning he was told that his wife and daughter were asleep, that they had been suffering from hysteria and would soon recover. Mendell then told of his family sorrows.

"We came from Russia fourteen years ago and settled in Meriden, Conn.," he said. "I made a good living and my little girl, who is now twenty-five years old, went to school. She learned to sing and play the piano, and one day my wife said to me that our daughter would become a great singer and suggested we move to a bigger town where she could take lessons. So we moved to Waterbury, where she studied music. My wife said we must go to a bigger place for our Golda, so we went to Boston and she studied at a conservatory, and then my wife says she and Golda must go to New York, and they went, leaving me behind, and I went to Providence.

"Always they had to go to bigger places. They went to Paris, London, Vienna. I sent them money every week. They came back to this country. I begged them to come back to me, but they wouldn't. They wanted to shine in society and Golda was to become a great singer. Last Fourth of July I came to see them. They were living in Yonkers. They told me Golda would become a grand opera star, only so many singers were jealous of her and she couldn't get a position. Mendell said he had heard that many actors who were really great could never become famous because somebody was jealous of them. He said it was very different in the vegetable business, where there is no professional envy.

WOMAN BURGLARS IN AN ORGANIZED GANG

But Two Who Are Sentenced for Robbery Refuse to Divulge Names of Other Assailants.

That there is an organized gang of female burglars operating in this city was the statement made by Assistant District Attorney Albert Blog Unger to Judge Rosalesky in General Sessions to-day. Mr. Unger made the statement when Florence Ross, twenty-three years old, and Emily Smith, twenty-four years old, both of No. 308 West Twenty-fourth Street, were arraigned for sentence for robbing the store of the W. D. Langan Company at No. 1 West Forty-second Street.

"There is no doubt in my mind, based on the examination of these defendants," Mr. Unger told Judge Rosalesky, "but what they belong to an organized band of female burglars. They steadfastly refuse, however, to divulge the names of other members of the gang."

The evidence against the two girls disclosed the fact that the premises were entered by the two women by jimmying open the fanlight over the street door and cutting the supporting chain. Several hundred dollars' worth of silk shirts and neckwear were stolen from the store.

Judge Rosalesky sentenced the two women to an indefinite term in the Bedford reformatory.
