THE ROAD TO RECOGNITION

Runs Through the Land of Foresight.

The successful business man of to-day immediately gives one the impression that he considers his general physical condition as important as his credit rating.
It is a poor business man who thinks otherwise. In all branches of commercial activity the seakine is unbecom-

TWO DIE IN CHAIR AND PREPARATION AWAKENS WAITE

The electrocution of Roy Champin and John Suppe at Sing Sing prison to-day gave Arthur W. Waite his first real idea of the horrors of the death house, and within a few hours after his arrival there. It did not affect Waite, officials said, as much as it did others in the death house, where the men had been a year.
One of the first things the poisoner heard on entering his cell was that his second day was to witness a double execution. He learned that the men, at their own request, were to be given a feast on the eve of their death. Early last night Champin's mother, who had taken a house at Ossining to be near him, visited him, and there was a tearful and hysterical farewell.

Waite was not among those who did not sleep well last night. The early preparations for the executions, however, aroused him. He could hear the voices of Father Cashin and Champin as they prayed. He heard the patter of feet going through the little door, and joined in the words of farewell from other inmates.
Champin's mother waited in the prison office and on the lawn, frequently kneeling in prayer, until told it was over. Then she broke down. Four shocks were necessary to kill Champin.
Suppe died easily. He walked alone to the chair except for two guards behind. He had refused religious consolation. On reaching the chair he sat down stiffly, as a soldier might have done. One shock appeared to have killed him, but he was given two others. Neither Warden Kirchwey nor his deputy, Spencer Miller, went to the death chamber.
Champin killed Henry McGee, his uncle, during a family quarrel at Westville, Allegheny County. Suppe murdered Vincenzo Abbatiello at Westbury, Nassau County. Suppe was employed on the estate of Harry Payne Whitney, and his victim on that of Willard D. Straight. They quarrelled over a debt Suppe owed.

MISS ANGELICA BROWN AT THE RACES

FORCED TO ROB, HE SAYS.

"Bad Black Man" Compelled Cohen to Beat Tailor, He Declares.
A "bad little black man" with a gun played it against the head of Harry Cohen, an old clothes dealer without a home, put a blackjack in Harry's hand and a bunch of skeleton keys in his pocket, and then made him go into the tailor shop of Adolph Jamroga at No. 81 Northern Avenue, and beat Jamroga and try to rob his till. Then the bad little man escaped and Harry was caught.
That was the old clothes man's story at Police Headquarters to-day, after he had been brought in by Patrolman Geldmar of the West One Hundred and Seventy-seventh Street station. Geldmar said Cohen never had escaped, when he ran after beating Jamroga, but for baby carriage along the sidewalk that blocked his path.
