

OLD SEXTON DEAD, ST. PAUL'S CLOCK WON'T KEEP TIME

A good many of the million or more New Yorkers who work downtown have noticed in recent weeks that the big clock in the steeple of St. Paul's no longer keeps time. After more

A bargain means quality and quantity combined—one without the other is not a bargain. When you see toilet paper advertised seven, ten, twelve rolls for a quarter, look at the quality first, then ask the number of sheets in each roll.

"It's the Counted Sheets That Count"

Scott's Tissue Toilet Paper

Is as "soft as old linen," pure white and absorbent—this is your quality test. 1000 counted sheets, 10c.

Sanit-Tissue toilet paper, "soft and clothlike"—its balsam treatment makes it healing—your quality test. 2500 counted sheets in a carton of 3 rolls for 35c. Ask your dealer.

than a century of faithful service, in which it had been out of order on few occasions, the clock has developed an erratic spirit. It runs very well for a day or two, and men who have timed their watches by its hands for years say to themselves, "Well, the old clock is running again," and fall satisfied that it should be so. But the next day, or maybe the one afterward, the multitude accustomed to regulate their goings and comings by St. Paul time find it sadly late or surprisingly fast. Often the hands stop still. Or the hour on one of its four faces will disagree with that on the other three. Occasionally each of the four registers a different hour.

For thirty-one of its 118 years the clock was cared for by Philip G. Walter, the sexton. Walter knew its every whim. He had learned how to manage its aged parts from the sexton who preceded him, and took a certain pride in seeing that it was oiled and cleaned. It was wound under his eye by a crank and pinion dating back to an age when clocks were made by hand. And it kept good time, heralding the hour three or every minute of the day. Then Walter died. He didn't exactly die in the usual meaning of the term, but losing himself in the church just before he was tired of living, his friends say.

One wintry night a few months ago the sexton toiled up the rickety ladder to a room where the bell ropes can be reached and ended his life. He climbed on top of the organ bellows and tied a wash cord to a convenient beam. Then he let himself into space and died there, hanging by the neck. His assistant found him in the morning, and there was a great stir. The church held a purification service to rid the ancient building of profanation. Walter was buried and the world went on in much the old way.

Not so the clock. Walter no longer was there to see that it had proper care, and younger men lacked the understanding of its whimsies that he had gained in thirty-one years of daily attention. It began to lose time, to gain time and stop altogether when least expected. An inscription on the frame says that it was "Made by John Thwaites, Greenwell, London, 1784," and the venerable time-keeper was not to be handled lightly by newcomers. Clock experts were summoned, and they have tinkered with it week after week while its vacation still persists. It was made by hand and is one of the oldest clocks in America. Many of the parts could not be duplicated except by a skillful workman at his forge, just as the original parts were made.

There has been some talk of taking down the old clock and substituting a new one. But this would be a shock to several generations of New Yorkers. The friendly face of the clock is so much a part of the church and the downtown district that a new one would be a painful reminder that time does indeed flee. Though it no longer registers ten hours with the accuracy of yore, time is speeding on and bids fair to claim the clock as one of its victims.

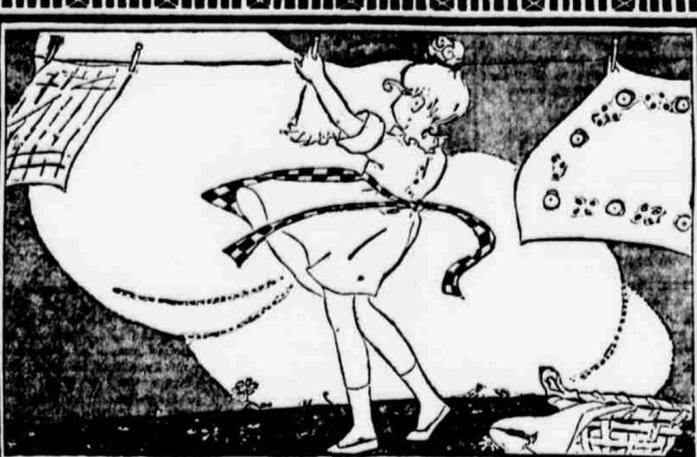

DROP KOBRE INDICTMENTS.

Supreme Court Justice Weeks to-day dismissed five indictments filed by the December, 1914, Grand Jury against Max Kobre, a private banker who was found dead June 4 in the kitchen of his home at No. 113 West One One Hundred and Twenty-second Street. The indictments charged Kobre with receiving deposits in his bank after he knew it was insolvent.

The indictments were dismissed on the recommendation of District Attorney Swann, who filed with Justice Weeks a copy of the death certificate from the Board of Health. Kobre conducted three private banks, one in Manhattan and two in Brooklyn. They were closed by the State Banking Department in August, 1914, after it was estimated the liabilities were more than $2,500,000. There were 26,000 depositors, mostly immigrants. Two of them committed suicide as a result of the closing of the banks.

Welcome

To Our Magnificent Piano Salons

During Convention Week of National Association of Piano Manufacturers
June 19 to 26

The doors of New York are wide open—the key has been thrown away, and the visiting public during the Convention Week can have every privilege granted that the great metropolis offers.

But, most surely, none will conduct more "Open House" than GIMBELS

We have been chosen by leading manufacturers as headquarters, and our spacious Eighth Floor Music Salon will be thronged with admiring delegates from all over the United States.

The Famous Makers of CONREID, PACKARD and MILTON Pianos

realizing the possibilities of the great display rooms, requested space on our Eighth Floor for exhibition of their masterful creations—the supreme accomplishment in the manufacture of high-grade instruments, known to the art.

We Are Permitted to Sell These Model Pianos Upon One Condition that is, that we do not remove them from their position in our Salon until after next Monday.

Here is a Wonderful Opportunity for New Yorkers to Buy a Piano

High-salaried, skilled workmen took weeks and weeks to produce these instruments, so that the most critical observer—the manufacturer—and the dealer, could not point their finger to even the slightest flaw. Now they are placed for demonstration, before men who will center a microscopic gaze upon every inch of exterior and interior—men who have spent years in making fine pianos and who know every little detail of manufacture—with all the trade secrets. BUT THESE PIANOS ARE PERFECT—OF SUPERIOR QUALITY, and no matter how men may try they cannot surpass the excellence of material, quality and durability of these instruments.

It now remains for you to take advantage of this Exhibition to make an exceptionally attractive purchase. There will be no repetition of this event. No renewal of this offer after this week of the convention. Positively it is our most sensational offering of the year.

Special Elevators will carry you to the Music Salon on the Eighth Floor.
