TRIAL OF "REDS" BRINGS FOLLOWERS TO CROWDED COURT

Berkman and Emma Goldman Called "Disturbers of Law and Order."

In a courtroom as hot as the proverbial hinges of Tophet, the trial of Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman, the Anarchists, began to-day before Judge Mayer in the Federal Building. The room was early fammed with friends and followers of the "Red" leaders. Scores of others were denied admission and escorted from the building by United States Marshals.

Emma Goldman was resplendent in a pink and black shirwaist, and her hair gave indications of more care than since her arrest with Berkman, charged with entering into a conspiracy to dissuade men from registering under the Selective Draft Law. Berkman, too, was spruced up a bit, having discarded his white barber's coat for a suit of gray. Masculine looking women in low heeled shoes made up a considerable bulk of the crowd. Only one of the lot stood above her fellows.

During the days when the jury was being selected this beautiful Anarchist was not permitted in the courtroom, but to-day, in a tightly fitting blue-tailored suit and a little straw hat circled by an orange ostrich feather, she beamed sweetly upon the guardians of the portals and swept majestically into a spectator's seat.

When Assistant District Attorney Content began his opening address he was interrupted by Berkman, who announced that he had motions for dismissal to make. The Court permitted the motions, and reading from notes, Berkman demanded acquittal on the ground that the conscription law is unconstitutional.

"The conscription law is unconstitutional," he declared. "It is a violation of the moral, ethical and religious views of the people of the United States. The conscription law is highly immoral and prejudicial to the best interests of the country."

"The United States is not invaded, nor is it in danger of invasion. The war is not a defensive, but an offensive one. It is not just to force American citizens to die on a foreign soil."

Prosecutor Content in his address to the jury kept referring to Goldman and Berkman as "these two disturbers of law and order." Again, he remarked that they "have tried to inflame the populace at public meetings."

The first witness called to the stand was Mary Eleanor Fitzgerald, financial secretary of the No Conscription League. She has long been an associate of both the anarchist leaders in their various activities.

Early in the session Berkman gave indications of the bitter fight to be made by himself and Emma against conviction. He was constantly making his feet following objections as the witness was being questioned by Content.

Miss Fitzgerald, tall, sandy-haired and blue-eyed, testified to her labors at anarchist headquarters. She came here from San Francisco, and told of a meeting held at Emma Goldman's flat, where on May 9 the No Conscription League came into being. She testified that Leonard D. Abbott was among those present. The witness was questioned with regard to her activities with Hiss and Mother Karch, two anarchist publications, the first edited by Berkman and the latter by Emma Goldman.

While Miss Fitzgerald was being questioned as to various documents of which nearly a ton fell into the clutches of the law, Berkman and his female colleague were constantly on their feet admitting that they were responsible for the papers. In defense conceded the sending through the mail of anti-conscription literature.

During the proceedings and shortly after noon a package addressed to the Judge and sent through the mail, was received. It was laid on the bench by a Marshal. Judge Mayer opened the package and ordered that a detective be assigned to duty in the court open it.

The detective went into an ante-room and fearlessly attacked the binding twine. The Marshal stood pop-eyed and ready to make a dash. Slowly the wrapper was torn off and then as the Marshal was about to spring through the door a look was brought to light.

FOUR IN THIEF TRAP.
Police Say Prisoners Were Cutting Way Into Clear Store.
The United Clear store in Seventh Avenue near Twenty-eighth Street has been robbed so many times the police set a trap. Early to-day four men crept up to the rear windows and began cutting the bars, and the trap closed on them. Detectives Ahearn and Andrews bagged all four and with them got a well stocked burglar's kit.

The prisoners described themselves: John Daniels, twenty, No. 625 East Thirtieth Street; Jacob Ratovsky, twenty-two, No. 12 Willet Street; Sam Honour, nineteen, No. 42 Cherry Street; and Alphonse Gervasio, twenty-three, No. 247 West Twenty-seventh Street.

MISS POMEROY NOW IN PHILADELPHIA, DETECTIVES SAY

Family Gone There for Her—Police Told They "May Drop the Case."

Miss Velma Pomeroy, the beautiful suffrage and war relief worker who has been missing since last Tuesday evening from her rooms at No. 125 Washington Place, has been found by her family in Philadelphia. Acting Capt. Grant Williams, who has been leading the police search for Miss Pomeroy, was told to-day that "the police may drop the case."

Capt. Williams's informant was Detective Taylor of the Schindler Agency, who was called to the telephone when Williams tried to communicate with Miss Pomeroy's cousin, Miss Helen Russell, with whom she lived. Taylor said Miss Russell had gone to Philadelphia to join Miss Pomeroy and refused to tell where the missing girl was found or how. Taylor also said that former Supreme Court Judge Charles W. Pomeroy of KallsPELL, Mont., had gone to Philadelphia for his daughter.

The police said they had no intention of dropping their investigation until they knew all the details of the girl's going away.

The information furnished the police by Judge Pomeroy indicates that he believes his daughter to be suffering a nervous breakdown. A threat of suicide contained in a letter Miss Pomeroy mailed to a friend on Tuesday night, the last heard from her, caused the father to hurry East and spare no effort in the country-wide search instituted by Police Commissioner Woods.

Miss Pomeroy, spoken of as an unusually pretty type of Western girl, had been in the city a few years, and recently left the Woman Suffrage offices at No. 303 Fifth Avenue for a position with the "Four Minute Men," a recruiting office established by prominent members of the Yale Club at No. 53 East Forty-fourth Street. Her father denies that Miss Pomeroy had any kind of a love affair.

GEORGE RECTOR PAYS.

But He Protests He Couldn't Speed With Sand in Carburetor.
There was sand in the carburetor and it wasn't much of a car anyway, yet George W. Rector (the Broadway Rector, though he gave his home address as Long Beach), this morning spoiled his 100,000-mile record as a speedless motorist.

It was in Magistrate Kochendorfer's Court, Jamaica, Motorcyclist Rector accused Rector of driving thirty-five miles an hour on the Merrick Road.

"I know, because I tested with my speedometer," Smith said. "Impossible," retorted Rector. "I've driven 100,000 miles here and in France. I've driven all kinds of cars, and I know that the one I was driving when Smith stopped me couldn't make thirty-five miles an hour—especially since there was sand in the carburetor that day. I never speeded in my life anyway."

But the Magistrate said it was "a question of veracity" and that the policeman was "a good fellow" which Rector admitted. So he paid a $25 fine.

MOVIE MAN ON U BOAT.

Took Pictures While Greek Ship AN ATLANTIC PORT, July 2.—Moving picture views were taken from the deck of a submarine which fired thirty-five shots and sank the Greek steamship Dorothy on June 14 off the Italian coast, according to eleven members of the Dorothy's crew, who arrived here to-day on the Italian steamship Giuseppe Verdi from Genoa.

The submarine opened fire without warning, the men said. The crew lowered two boats and rowed to shore while the picture man kept at his work. The Dorothy was of 2,675 tons gross. She was in the Mediterranean trade.

TWO GRAND JURIES TAKE UP BUNGLING IN CRUGER MYSTERY

In a complete reorganization of New York's detective force, aside from whatever action the Grand Jury way take.

The Wallsten inquiry does not reopen until Thursday, but enough is trickling from its headquarters to indicate that the detective branch is in for a first rate flaying. For example, of forty-three reports made in the Cruger case, only three showed individual effort on the part of the Fourth Branch detectives, and this effort was of a rudimentary nature.

ITALY TO DELAY TRIAL OF COCCHI FOR MONTHS DURING INVESTIGATION

Little Chance of Extradition, and Agent of New York Police Can't Examine Prisoner.

BOLOGNA, Italy, July 2.—Alfredo Cocchi probably will not be put on trial here for several months on the charge of murdering Ruth Cruger in New York City on Feb. 13. Judge Zucconni, the presiding magistrate, has made it clear the preliminary investigation will take that long.

The chances for Cocchi's extradition to America are remote, despite the diplomatic pressure brought to bear in the case through the new and more intimate relations between Italy and the United States. These relations can scarcely affect well established points of Italian law.

Joseph William Grigg, representing Police Commissioner Woods of New York, has presented his credentials to the police and the Royal Prosecutor and asked to be acquainted with the results of the examination of Cocchi. Mr. Grigg first called on Judge Zucconni and then conferred at length with Signor Venturini, Cocchi's attorney.

"I understand how great is the interest in America to find out, if possible, through the Cocchi case, whether any connivance existed between the American police and the series of so-called elopements of girls under age that have occurred frequently without, as a rule, the men culprits being discovered," said Judge Zucconni.

"This is in reality what Detective Grigg has as his mission. 'I hope America will not take offense if, while we are not allowing even the accused's lawyer to see the papers in the case or interrogate the prisoner, we also forbid the representative of the American police having any such privilege.'

"However, what Detective Grigg cannot do directly he can obtain in an indirect way by having the interrogations he would like to put to the prisoner addressed to the imprisoned man through the Magistrate. He must submit his questions through the American Embassy in Rome, which will pass them on to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, this department turning them over to the Ministry of Justice, which finally forwards them to the Magistrate."

"Once these relations are established we will undertake the investigation desired by the American police, transmitting the results through the same channels to Detective Grigg."

INVESTIGATION EXPECTED TO LAST FOR SEVERAL MONTHS.
"What must be put clearly before the American public and its authorities is that so long as the investigation lasts absolutely no one can have official information regarding the developments in the case nor be allowed to communicate directly or indirectly with the prisoner. I can foresee that the investigation will last several months. In fact, while awaiting with interest the American newspapers containing the descriptions of how the body was found, we cannot conduct examinations on such reports but must wait until we receive the official legal evidence from the American authorities. This means a long delay."

"The confession of Cocchi was relatively unimportant, as it was evidently made from a desire to defend himself. It is most important to compare his statement and his assertions with what was discovered in New York at the finding of Ruth Cruger's body. The question arises, was the body sufficiently well preserved four months after the crime to reconstruct the tragedy and establish how death occurred."

Signor Venturini, Cocchi's counsel, has been taken ill. His inability to see the prisoner or the Prosecutor's documents seems to have brought about something resembling nervous prostration. He declared the obstructive processes of the Prosecutor were outrageous.

"It is a matter of honor with me," he explained, "to see that the prisoner gets a fair trial, as I have undertaken in my old age to defend all poor Italians whom I can serve."

The wall of silence built up around Cocchi continues virtually impenetrable, but from a person frequently in contact with the prisoner it is learned that in a moment of emotion he said he wished it were possible to send a message of love to his wife and his little son in New York.

Cocchi is said to have increasing hopes that his attorney will be able to convince the jury that his client's mind was unbalanced when he committed the crime.

Father Prospero Perpicari, Chaplain of the prison of San Giovanni in Monte, visited Cocchi Saturday for the first time. Father Perpicari said he had given the authorities a pledge which would prevent him repeating the substance of his conversation with the prisoner.

Cocchi has been removed to a cell where it is believed he can be kept more securely. His prison number is 15,372. The prison books have an entry showing Cocchi to have been taken there on June 17.

[The date given as that on which Cocchi entered the prison does not conform with previous despatches. It would have been the day following the finding of Ruth Cruger's body. A cable from Italy on June 21 said Cocchi had been arrested that day after being under surveillance for some time.]
