contest the share which would have gone to the contestants is to go to the Archbishop or his successors. The will was made in June, 1911. It was filed by counsel for Anna Leary of No. 129 East 63d Street, a niece of the late Countess, who is named executrix.

In providing for a sacristy at the Cathedral, the will states that this is done on the promise of the Archbishop (the late Cardinal Farley), that there shall be reserved under the sacristy a space for a vault to contain the bodies of eight persons. It is stipulated that the bodies of the father of the late Countess, James Leary, her mother, Catherine, and her brothers, Arthur, Charles and Daniel, shall be taken from the vault at the old Cathedral on Mott Street and be placed in the new vault to be constructed under the Fifth Avenue building.

Two nieces, Louise Leary and Anna Leary, of No. 129 East 63d Street, are given the old family vault in the Mott Street Cathedral, and each one is named as a legatee of one-fourth of the residuary estate. Anna Leary also receives $2,000, to be disposed of in charitable work according to personal instructions given by the Countess.

The Arthur Leary Memorial Chapel on the grounds of Bellevue Hospital, with a trust fund of $5,000 for upkeep of the same, is left to the Archbishop of the New York Diocese. The same disposition is made of all the books and contents of the library room at the Christy Hospital on Blackwell's Island, which was furnished by the testatrix.

Three nieces, Lillie Berry, Alice Berry and Annie Berry, of No. 78 Morton Street, Brooklyn, are bequeathed the remaining half of the residuary estate in equal shares.

NEW TAX MAKES SODA MEN THROW UP HANDS IN DESPAIR

Start Petition Asking Congress to Unscramble Perplexities of Situation.

The Soda Fountain Association of New York having made an earnest effort for two days to show the new tax law, now throws up its hands in helpless protest. The association members met at the McAlpin, asked each other a lot of answerless questions, and started a petition to Congress to unscramble the situation. Here are a few of the questions they asked: "Why is an ice cream cone bought at a pusher taxable, although there is no tax on the more elaborate version of the same thing, a 75 cent 'baked Alaskan' at an uptown hotel?" "Why is hot chocolate taxable when cold is not?" "Why exempt a plain glass of milk and tax one with an egg in it?" "Why exempt grape juice, plain, and tax it when diluted?"

STOLEN EXPLOSIVES PUT ALL POLICEMEN ON WATCH

Grave Peril Seen in Thefts Attributed to Boys at Van Cortlandt Park.

Bronx detectives have been unable to get a line on the explosives stolen from the army show in Van Cortlandt Park Thursday night, and the entire police force has been notified to be on the lookout for them. How the explosives could be stolen with a guard of 200 men of the 42d Infantry, scores of policemen and 300 Boy Scouts on watch is still a mystery.

Lieut. Col. E. J. W. Harsdale, in charge of the ordnance, said this morning that the most dangerous of the stolen explosives were the "duds," or shells which failed to explode. The fuses and caps were still attached to them and there was danger of their exploding at any time. The hand grenades taken, he said, were apt to inflict serious injury by careless handling.

Why Strive to Be Honest? 40 Feathers Make a Pound And a $5 Fine for Benny

It Was Chicken-Dressing Day in the Goldstein Shop and There Were Only Two Feathers on the Floor, Anyway—But Pshaw! What's the Use?

"Which is the heavier—a pound of feathers, or a pound of lead?" "Not a few of us, in our younger days, wrestled with this all-important problem, and on receiving the answer, were properly chagrined. But Benny Goldstein brought a new angle to the feather question when he was brought into Essex Market Court yesterday before Judge Brough. There were feathers and feathers. It seemed as though all the poultry dealers of the east side were on deck to answer the charges of the Health Department of keeping unsanitary chicken studios. Most of them fervently denied a knowledge of English, were studiously ignorant of everything in the world, and either had their cases continued or received the usual fine of $5. But Benny failed to grasp the formula and admitted that he could speak the language common to some parts of our country. "He had a bunch of feathers about his shop, which was in a filthy condition," declared the officer responsible for Benny's arrest. "Do you speak English?" asked the Judge. "Sure," admitted Benny. "Have you any explanation to offer?" "They was only a couple of feathers about my shop, Thursday is a big day and the women come and trim their chickens before taking them home. A woman had just been there and the wind was blowing, so they was a couple of feathers laying around when the cop called." "How many feathers were there?" inquired His Honor. "Oh, only a couple." "Were there half a bushel of them?" "Oh, no," declared the injured Benny, "only half a pound of them." "How many feathers are there in a half pound?" "About twenty." "Five dollars, and don't let the feathers fly after this." "What's the use of being honest?" asked Benny as he felt for his pocket-book. "Such is progress," is the byword at the new Essex Market Court Building. The old court has become a memory, but a happy memory. NEW COURT for there one could not possibly be lost or become dizzy in finding his way around. But now things are different.

Though the court attendants and other attaches are fast learning the ropes of their palatial mansion, they still sigh as they ascend the wrong staircase or enter the Judge's room while searching for the "pen." And the opinions differ. "Where is the wicket?" one asks. "Not ready yet." "Where is the pen?" "Downstairs, and then ask some one."

In former days, one had only to step from one spot to another to interview Billy Helms, the fingerprint expert; Mrs. Moyer, the court matron, and Mr. Rice, the clerk. But now it is a matter of many minutes.

In the rear of the court there are two stairways—one leading to the "pen," the other to the Judge's room and that of District Attorney Hogan. One arrives at the twin doorways and tosses a coin. Heads the right, and tails the left. Tails wins, and the wanderer, in search of a comrade who is in the meshes of the law, finds himself in a session with His Honor himself. Or the visitor of the Judge loses the toss-up and appears in the room of iron bars.

Another interesting question that must be solved is whether the "rolling hoosgow" must be reduced in size, or whether part of the gateway will be removed. For the time-honored way which conducts the prisoners to their judgment is far too large for the gateway. The prisoners accordingly must walk from the wagon to the inner doorway. These things, however, are merely incidental. The old court, drab, incomplete and unsatisfactory as it was, nevertheless had a strong hold on the hearts of those who worked there for years. Conditions will soon be adjusted to the satisfaction of all, but just now there is not a court clerk, with the possible exception of Warden Hall, who does not pine for the rude benches of the old Essex. "How do you like it?" he was asked. "Great. And the boys are tickled to death. They hate to leave here and go to the other coop. Believe me, after the news has spread about my new pen, we will have to put out a sign, 'Standing Room Only.'"

"UNPARDONABLE SIN" FEATURES OPENING OF MOSS'S BROADWAY

The Broadway Theatre opening last night under the new management of H. B. Moss was auspicious. The theatre was filled and many clamored for tickets who could not be accommodated.

For the opening Mr. Moss presented for the first time in New York the photo dramatization of Major Rupert Hughes' "The Unpardonable Sin," with Blanche Sweet in the leading role. Major Hughes' stirring pen pictures of the outrages committed on women and children before the United States entered the war, prove excellent material for the screen. The hostility of the German officers who swarmed through Belgium is hard in all its naked horror. Even the most delicate and shocking situations are not evaded, but are handled in shadows that, while half concealing the terrible crimes, suggest every detail. The film from a scenic and photographic viewpoint is extremely well done. It may add considerably in terminating the tendency in some public places in New York to resume the German customs and manners of pre-war days. The overture for the opening was "The Masterpiece of Techaikowsky was presented in a musicianly manner by the orchestra under the direction of S. W. Lawton. Mr. Moss's promise of exceptionally fine and appropriate music was fulfilled throughout the drama. The dramatization of Major Hughes' book was made by Harry Garson. The drama will continue indefinitely. Mr. Moss was congratulated on all sides over the successful opening.
