HARRISS SAYS GOOD HUMOR WILL CHECK AUTO ACCIDENTS ON CONGESTED CITY STREETS

Commissioner Prescribes It as Remedy for Traffic Jams—Would Raise Cost of Drivers' Licenses to $1,000, Maybe $3,000, to Insure Responsible Set of Men and End "Cruising."

Get up in a good humor every morning and your chances of being knocked down by an automobile are cut by 50 per cent.—that is if you are a pedestrian. If you run a car do likewise, and it's much less likely that you will experience that terrifying moment when you run down some screaming man, woman or child.

Good humor that comes of a good night's rest and that makes one considerate of other people's feelings—this is one of the remedies for automobile accidents proposed by Dr. John A. Harriss, Special Deputy Police Commissioner in Charge of Traffic.

"The ill-humored driver is a peculiarly selfish individual," said Dr. Harriss. "He is impatient of the restraints of our regulations. He is constantly seeking to get ahead of the other fellow and pedestrians sometimes become pests to him. While he has no intention of harming any one, he is less likely to recognize the rights of the man who crosses or seeks to cross the street in front of him."

"The man in a bad temper is less likely to consider the feelings and rights of others than the good humored man. "The same rule applies to the bad tempered pedestrian. His impatience will lead him to take chances which he otherwise would avoid. He does not recognize that automobile drivers have rights as well as he.

LOVE MATE GONE, GARLAND TURNING PENITENT TO WIFE

Friends Expect He Will Soon Seek Forgiveness and a Reunion.

NORTH CARVER, Mass., Jan. 28.—Adroit at quick mental changes, Charles Garland's next move may be a visit to his wife at Dedham to beg her forgiveness. She and her child are at the home of her parents. He now confesses more of a willingness to talk to her than on previous occasions.

He admits he loved her when they were married, that she may again occupy a similar place in his affections, and that he may return to her if he decides "it is the right thing to do." His mental revolutions may be due in part to disappointment in losing his "love mate." His intimates would not be surprised to hear at any time that he had returned to his wife.

"New York now has 14,000 taxicabs, and as every one knows, a very great many owners and drivers are irresponsible. In case of accident the injured person has no recourse. "My plan includes police control of taxis. It is the logical plan and we will come to it yet. It will mean we applicants must pass a rigid examination as to his record and his ability to drive. Such a system would make it safe for your wife, sister or mother to take a cab without danger."

Garland's Abandoned Wife Will Win Fight for Millionaire, Says Jane Burr

Novelist, Feminist and Expert in Sex Complications Studies the Quadrilateral Love Tangle of the Cape Cod Eccentric and Gives Decision.

Marguerite Mooers Marshall. How does a woman analyze young Charles Garland, the "reluctant millionaire," and the extraordinary romance of which he is the storm center? Charles started society a little over a year ago when, from his farm on Cape Cod, he announced that he would not accept the fortune of $1,500,000, left in trust for him by his father, because—in his own phrase—"Christ would have refused to be a millionaire, why shouldn't I?"

Recently, Charles made several other interesting announcements: (1) that he had decided to take his money; (2) that he was no longer living with his wife; (3) that he still cared for her, but that his spiritual development had demanded, and received, the satisfaction of his love for his mother's private secretary, Miss Lillian Conrad; (4) that he expects Miss Conrad to join him in the spring, on his farm at North Carver, Mass.; (5) that he does not expect to become reconciled with his wife.

Mrs. Garland says, in effect, that she is ready to welcome him at any time if he will return to her, but that she could not agree to share him with Miss Conrad. Mrs. Garland is living with her parents, and is about to become a mother for the second time.

Miss Conrad, although she now has left Garland, has admitted their physical and spiritual love, has asserted that she was ready to make any sacrifice on his behalf, and has even said that she loved him enough to share him with his wife. There is still another woman, to complete the quadrilateral relationship, a Miss Doris Benson, now studying agriculture at Amherst. She declares that Garland is her ideal man, and in the spring plans to settle on the farm next to his, where she also expects to find Miss Conrad.

TO CLEAR CALENDAR OF LIQUOR CASES

Federal Judge Intimates Light Fines in Pleas of Guilty—Jail Sentences for Conviction.

In an effort to relieve the congestion of the criminal calendar of the Federal Court in Brooklyn Judge Harlan B. Howe of Vermont, sitting as an extra Judge for the purpose, will give next week to going through the greater part of 700 cases involving alleged violation of the Volstead act.

"Courage seems to me the dominant characteristic of the other woman in the case, Lillian Conrad. Mrs. Winton has a phrase somewhere about 'the courage of her lack of convictions.' That is the sort this girl had; the courage to stand up against the conventions and laws in which she didn't believe. The woman who, in America, publicly admits her love for a married man, stands with her back to the wall and may expect to be shot at sunrise. Even if, as it is said, Miss Conrad has recanted some of the convictions she expressed about the rights of love, she had her moment of daring. If it is true that she has decided to give up Garland most persons will applaud her decision.

"All these people," summed up Miss Burr, "are simply getting ahead of the crowd. Most of us are not yet ready to admit, in Charles Garland's own words, that 'every-line of the marriage ceremony contains an ungodly hypocrisy, but the promise to love and cherish is the most deceitful. It is not within a man's power to promise to love and cherish, because his emotions are not within the control of his intellect.' To-day few of us publicly agree with these sentiments. But wait fifty years!"
