

An Odd Under-Water Movie of Dog Life-Saver Taken at the Aquarium

Hero Dog Dives Like a Fish To Save Doll in Aquarium Tank

Canine Believed He Was Saving Baby, For He Has Rescued Two From Drowning.

There has been many a queer fish at the Aquarium in Battery Park. But probably never there has been so unique and thrilling an exhibit as the one in which a fine Australian Chesapeake dog and a baby doll played the leading roles.

Within those brown old walls last week this dog dived into a large tank of sea water to save what he believed was a drowning child. And while he was under the water a moving picture machine was taking a photographic record of the cool, calculating method employed by the animal to complete the rescue.

This is said to be the first time a dog has been photographed under water actually attempting to save a child.

Underneath his close-cut, reddish-brown hair this canine love of children. Many times, according to his master, W. J. Cassidy, this gentle pal has braved death to save little ones. Once, for instance, he saved a little girl from Ocean near Alki Point, Seattle. Some time earlier he had done a similar feat at Lake Worth, two miles from the city of Fort Worth, Tex.

The pictures, taken at the Aquarium with the co-operation of the authorities there, vividly show how Bob effects his rescue. As soon as he takes his spring into the water Bob opens his mouth, ready to grasp the sinking body he seeks to save. Accurately judging distance and time he uses his forepaws exactly as a human would to clutch over his teeth so not to injure the child. Bob deftly manoeuvres himself into a position to grasp the clothing at the shoulder.

With a firm grip—and Bob makes rapid tests with jerks of his head as if he were shaking a mouse—the dog then lets his hind quarters sink, and paddling with his back legs towards water to the surface. All this time the head of the child is leaning against the broad, powerful nose of the dog. On the surface Bob points for shore, and makes rapid progress as his muscular legs stir the water.

The actual time that elapses is less than two seconds. A doll as large and as heavy as a four-year-old child was thrown into the tank. In less than one second Bob had sprung after it, had sunk to a depth of six feet and was on his way to the surface. His dive was perfect.

This fine dog, the size of a small St. Bernard, is not yet three years old. He was born in Australia and given to Mr. Cassidy by the owner, Lieut. Congrove of the British Army, when the dog was only four months old. Mr. Cassidy is a miner who has worked underground in all parts of the world, and he has found Bob a faithful pal. The dog is gentle, affectionate and clever. He is also a great protector and watch dog.

ENOUGH HARD COAL TO LAST 7 WEEKS

Prospect of Strike April 1 Brings Rush of Orders to the Operators.

SCRANTON, March 27.—The anthracite reserve stock at the present time is 8,000,000 tons, sufficient to meet demand for seven weeks, Charles S. Allen, Secretary of the Anthracite Coal Consumers' Association, announced today.

A rush of coal orders was reported last week. Some dealers worked Sunday meeting the demand. State police and authorities searched today for the source of radical literature of the Communist Party, urging anthracite miners to fight to a finish, and describing State troopers as "cosacks" and "tools of the big interests."

The Pennsylvania Coal Company today increased the price of its coal to employees by $1 a ton.

BLACK BOX SUBSTITUTE FOR SAFE IN WINDOW

Safe Robbers Use "Can Openers" in Two Brooklyn Raids.

Two week-end Brooklyn safe burglaries may have been the work of the same gang. In each case big safes were moved to the rear of the store and opened with "can openers." The grocery store on the H. C. Bock Company, 458 Manhattan Avenue, lost $1,600 in cash, and the Beck-Hazard Shot Company store, No. 323 Grand Street, $2,300 in cash.

The burglars pried the bars off a rear window and moved a 600-pound safe from the show window, where a light over it gave burglars a clear view to the rear. A box covered with black cloth was substituted for it. The safe was tipped over with the door ripped off.

At the shoe store the burglars lifted the street grating, entered the cellar and sawed a hole through the flooring.

It soon became necessary to use the pump, but the water gained such a headway that all became exhausted, though both men and women worked heroically. The hull gradually filled with water, the tail of the plane began to drag under the surface. Soon an enormous wave struck broadside, and the flying boat turned over on her back, sweeping all of us into the sea to woe.

"Mrs. Bulte came to the surface first, then Mr. Smith and Mrs. Smith. Of the three none could swim. I succeeded in getting them to the overturned plane. Mrs. Dickson and Mr. Bulte had not appeared on the surface. Mrs. Bulte made this discovery.

"My God! My husband, where is he?" she cried.

"I told her he would be all right in a few minutes and dived into the water, but I could not locate either him or Mrs. Dickson. Mrs. Bulte began to weep.

"I dived into the water and obtained cushions from the plane to use for life preservers. As I returned to them, I saw the body of Bulte floating. I stepped directly in front of Mrs. Bulte and obstructed her view. As the body passed me, I noted a wound on his forehead. He must have been killed before he struck the water when the plane overturned.

"Within the next thirty minutes the scene changed twice. On the horizon, we sighted the fishing boat. We began to laugh and contemplated being picked up. I was confident we would be saved. In fact, I felt like whistling. I believe I did. It kept up my morale.

"And the fishing boat changed its course.

"I can't understand in God's world why he did not keep on toward us. He knew I was in that locality somewhere. For he had seen me come down. I could see his name on the boat, less than half a mile away as he went on.

"The winds rose during the night and the women grew weaker. At least twelve times they were swept over, but I swam out and got them and brought them back each time.

"The next day our hopes rose as we saw other boats pass, but none came within less than a mile and a half of us. One of the women, Mrs. Smith, became utterly dejected.

"On into Wednesday night we rode. I got hold of the anchor rope and the other man and I lashed the two women to the overturned plane. Next day the two women died, and I held them in my arms as they smiled and breathed their last. They were exhausted, they sank away to their death, but they smiled until the last. We carried the bodies several hours, but realized the necessity of lightening the craft, and allowed the bodies to slip into the sea.

"Thursday, as dusk approached, Smith grew delirious and I strapped her on. At times he appeared rational and asked me what chance I thought we had of being rescued. I told him I thought we would yet be saved, and he said:

"I don't see how we can hold out much longer. Don't you think I had a brave wife? I assured him that I had never seen a more courageous woman.

"All right, Bob," he answered, promise me that if you return you will tell her sons how brave their mother was. Tell them the facts and tell them the truth about me. You will know as no other how I died. Tell them for me, boy."

"He removed three dollar bills from his pocket and asked me to give one to each of his three boys with his dying message.

"I pushed his body into the sea and all alone kept up my courage as best I could. The sun's heat had blistered me and the thirst was maddening. I chewed the ends of my fingers until blood came to appease my thirst. I saw boats pass and waved to them, but none saw me.

Sub-chasers in command of Capt. Caesar went out from Miami early today in the hope that some trace of the victims of the tragedy might be found. The airplane search has been discontinued.

began to pour into the hull, but I plugged the hole with my coat," said Moore. "We were almost on the edge of the Gulf Stream, in sight of Bimini, but not far enough to the side to escape the current. We drifted for some time, riding a high sea with waves running fifteen feet high. The passengers became excited, but were brave, and each gave all possible assistance.

"As we drifted to the north there came a thud as if we had struck a sandbar, but it proved to be a piece of wreckage, which tore another hole in the hull.

FRANCE APPROVES U. S. 'NO ALLIANCE' ACTION ON TREATY

Official Circles Expect Both Chambers to Adopt Our Reservation.

PARIS, March 27 (Associated Press).—The French Government will approve of adoption by the French Parliament of the "no alliance" reservation to the Four-Power Pacific Treaty adopted by the United States Senate. It was stated today in official circles.

French officials predicted the Senate and Chamber of Deputies would ratify the pact, together with the Brundage reservation. It was thought likely, however, that Parliament would adopt a reservation to the Root submarine resolutions, providing that since submarines are prohibited from attacking merchantment, the latter must be prohibited from arming themselves against submarines.

WASHINGTON, March 27.—Senator Hitchcock of Nebraska, ranking Democrat on the Foreign Relations Committee, who first raised the question as to the Senate's action on the supplementary Four power treaty, renewed in the Senate today his charges that the Administration leaders had obscured the whole situation with doubts, inconsistencies and uncertainties.

He declared he saw no real remedy now, because the treaty with its supplement had already been returned to the White House by the Secretary of State action unless re-submitted by the President.

A "radical difference" between President Harding and Secretary Hughes as to the nature of the supplement was shown, Senator Hitchcock said, by the fact that Mr. Hughes in making his report as head of the American delegation said there were "six treaties" to be ratified, while President Harding in laying the same arguments before the Senate described them as "seven treaties."

COAL MINERS MEET WITH OPERATORS

Scale Committee of the Men Arguing for an Advance to Stave Off Strike.

The four members of the scale committee of the Anthracite Miners' Union and the four of the operators' committee are holding their adjourned meeting this afternoon in the Union League Club, hoping to work out a solution of the coal situation and a scale that will prevent the ordered coal strike. At today's meeting the miners are endeavoring to show by figures that an increase is necessary for a living wage.

Joseph P. Ryan, Vice President of the International Longshoremen's Union was asked today what would be the attitude of the men of his union toward British coal brought into this country. He said his union would render every possible assistance to the miners, that there was no meeting of the Executive Committee until April 9, but that if there was cause for it he would call a special meeting.

The International Seamen's Union will hold a meeting to-night at No. 49 South Street to discuss the possibility of trouble in case the importation of British coal is attempted.

8 Murders, 35 Bank and Store Robberies and Train Hold-Up Charged to Band.

(Special to The Evening World.) CAMDEN, N. J., March 27.—In a little more than two months of crime, George Weisgerber, who was arrested in Gloucester County on March 19 for a burglary and started from Philadelphia in the custody of Sheriff West of Osceola County, Ia., this morning stand trial for murder, crowded more daredevil criminal adventure than the members of the old Jesse James and Younger outlaw gangs, operating in the Middle West, experienced in years. The James and Younger outfits travelled on horseback. Weisgerber and three others, comprising the Eddie Adams gang, travelled in automobiles and on trains, operating in the same parts of the Middle West that were covered by the James and Younger bands. Jesse and Frank James and Cole and Bob Younger.

Weisgerber's crimes around this part of New Jersey did not amount to much. He came in November, a fugitive from justice from Kansas, and settled in Paulsboro, where he had been employed five years ago. On March 17 he robbed the safe in the Pennsylvania Railroad Station at Paulsboro and failed to cover his trail. When he was arrested he made admissions which led the police to make inquiries in Kansas, Missouri and Iowa, which developed that the gang with which Weisgerber was connected was charged with eight murders, the wounding of 25 men, 35 bank and store robberies and the robbery of a Santa Fe express train in Kansas, all these crimes having been committed, according to the Western authorities, between the latter part of August and the early part of November, 1921.

Except that he would not make any direct admissions concerning the crimes that led to the charge of murder against him, Weisgerber talked freely of his career. He was a petty thief before he met, in the State Prison at Lansing, Kan., where he was serving a term for larceny, a man known as Eddie Adams, who was under sentence of from ten to twenty years for robbery. Adams had a bad record in Kansas and Missouri.

Weisgerber, according to his own story, was a sort of a prison trustee and in charge of repairs on the boilers. Two others serving short terms were named Pentelman and Turner. Adams, a natural leader, picked out these three to help him. He held the appeal of an arch criminal and they fell into his plans.

By reason of the trust imposed in them, Weisgerber, Pentelman and Turner were able to secrete wood, with which they made a ladder for the purpose of scaling the thirty-five-foot wall around the prison. They got away on the night of Aug. 12 under a hail of bullets fired by guards, hid in the woods for six days, in prison garb, raided a country clothing store in the night time, outfitting themselves. According to Weisgerber the gang's first big job was the hold-up of a bank that netted $87,000.

"We didn't make any plans," he said. "We rode into this burg and the bank looked good to us, so we walked in and stuck it up and made a clean getaway. By luck we made a twist that threw our pursuers off the track. That evening we got into another town, and while we were having a supper we heard that there was a
