

OUR PICTURE.

From the Am. Jour. of Photography, and the Allied Arts, for July 15.]

The beautiful little illustration in this number of the Journal of the Photographic Process, as worked out by the American Photographic Co., under the personal superintendence of Mr. J. W. Osborne, the inventor, who has during the last few years carried on the same work with great success, is reward. Many years ago photo-lithographs were produced here and in Europe—but they were too imperfect for circulation—did not meet with encouragement from publishers, who were most anxious to have their works reproduced. The numbers of the Journal will recollect the announcement in its pages of Mr. Osborne's arrival in this country, and the report of an address which he delivered before the American Photographic Society, about two years ago, when that young Society had been formed, buildings erected—machinery and apparatus built, and men instructed in the various chemical and mechanical manipulations—all forming an extensive establishment, which is daily producing what the world needs in the way of art and science. Many of the most elaborately illustrated works of the day, are being reproduced in such perfection that neither by the eye or measurement could the original be distinguished from the copy. Maps, engravings, illustrations, portraits, figures, etc., are multiplied in the most perfect proportions, and some of them are produced without the touch of a pencil or the setting of a type. The specimen now given is an example of that kind. It is a portrait of a man, "Poems and Pictures," published by Hurst & Blackett, of London. The engraving is a fine piece of wood cutting, and the poem, one of Sir Walter Scott's Moral Lessons in a few words. Photolithography is no longer a question, but a most successful established fact.
