

Amusements and Meetings To-Night.

BOOTH'S THEATRE—1:30 and 8. "Henry V." FIFTH AVENUE THEATRE—1:30 and 7:45. "Pique."

Index to Advertisements.

AMUSEMENTS—8th Page—4th, 5th, and 6th columns. BANKING HOUSES AND BANKERS—5th Page—2d column.

Business Notices.

IMPERIAL CARDS, $6 per dozen; Cartes des Visites, $5. (Established 1859.) ROCKWOOD, Photographer, 859 Broadway.

New-York Daily Tribune.

FOUNDED BY HORACE GREELEY.

SATURDAY, APRIL 15, 1876.

WITH SUPPLEMENT.

THE NEWS THIS MORNING.

FORGOTTEN.—It is reported that the Samoan King was driven into exile, but was brought back in a British steamer.

DOMESTIC.—Mr. Blaine regards his letters sufficient answer to the Indianapolis story. It is said that new indictments have been found against the safe burglars and Gen. Babcock.

CITY AND SUBURBAN.—The will of A. T. Stewart bequeaths most of his property to his wife, with whom is left the completion of his charitable plans.

THE WEATHER.—It is predicted that the weather will be cloudy but clearing. The thermometer was 60°, 64°, 68°.

Hard times will not sensibly diminish Easter offerings, at least as to the celebration of the day. Our columns contain a description of the preparations in the churches of this city and vicinity, and show that there will be no lack of solemn music and impressive ceremony.

By electing Ulisses F. Espallat, the Republic of Santo Domingo has secured for its President an experienced statesman, who enjoys the confidence of the mercantile community.

The Middle and New-England States are now enjoying better weather than is the case with usually more favored climes.

The Charter Commission, of which the Hon. Wm. M. Everts is President, shows in its report a due sense of the importance of the work it has undertaken.

Steinberger's adventures promise to be as entertaining as Gulliver's. His fall and imprisonment it appears were followed by the sale of his personal effects; the King having doubtless learned of the civilized mode of punishing traitors.

The letters of Mr. Bayard Taylor and of our regular correspondent in Philadelphia bring some cheering intelligence from the great exhibition.

Stewart's will is reported to be as entertaining as Gulliver's. His fall and imprisonment it appears were followed by the sale of his personal effects; the King having doubtless learned of the civilized mode of punishing traitors.

Stewart's will is reported to be as entertaining as Gulliver's. His fall and imprisonment it appears were followed by the sale of his personal effects; the King having doubtless learned of the civilized mode of punishing traitors.

Stewart's will is reported to be as entertaining as Gulliver's. His fall and imprisonment it appears were followed by the sale of his personal effects; the King having doubtless learned of the civilized mode of punishing traitors.

Premier, and insisted upon the Samoans taking back their King. Affairs were at last accounted in this critical condition, awaiting the arrival of the United States steamer Tuscarora, which it was expected, would effect Steinberger's release.

There is little probability that so serious a step will be taken by the British Government as to establish a legation at Cairo, and thus recognize Egypt as a sovereign power.

Our London correspondence shows, however, that even such a direct insult to Turkey from her traditional ally, and when most needing aid, is not impossible to the scheming genius of Disraeli.

We have published within the past two months nearly three hundred letters from our readers on the Presidential canvass.

Mr. Hiram A. Johnson, who has appeared as a witness in the Emma Mine investigation, figures in our columns this morning as the author of a problem to which the Committee, since it has resolved to go back of the original subject of inquiry, may do well to devote a little attention.

Prof. Timothy Dwight has shown how much can be said on one side of the Congregational controversy, and now Dr. Henry M. Dexter makes it manifest that there is much to be said on the other side.

There are few sovereigns in the world who deserve a more cordial and respectful welcome from the people of the United States than the Emperor of Brazil.

The new indictments which are reported to have been found in the safe burglary case will attract even greater popular attention than the original ones.

The Charter Commission, of which the Hon. Wm. M. Everts is President, shows in its report a due sense of the importance of the work it has undertaken.

Steinberger's adventures promise to be as entertaining as Gulliver's. His fall and imprisonment it appears were followed by the sale of his personal effects; the King having doubtless learned of the civilized mode of punishing traitors.

The letters of Mr. Bayard Taylor and of our regular correspondent in Philadelphia bring some cheering intelligence from the great exhibition.

Stewart's will is reported to be as entertaining as Gulliver's. His fall and imprisonment it appears were followed by the sale of his personal effects; the King having doubtless learned of the civilized mode of punishing traitors.

The letters of Mr. Bayard Taylor and of our regular correspondent in Philadelphia bring some cheering intelligence from the great exhibition.

Stewart's will is reported to be as entertaining as Gulliver's. His fall and imprisonment it appears were followed by the sale of his personal effects; the King having doubtless learned of the civilized mode of punishing traitors.

The letters of Mr. Bayard Taylor and of our regular correspondent in Philadelphia bring some cheering intelligence from the great exhibition.

Stewart's will is reported to be as entertaining as Gulliver's. His fall and imprisonment it appears were followed by the sale of his personal effects; the King having doubtless learned of the civilized mode of punishing traitors.

The letters of Mr. Bayard Taylor and of our regular correspondent in Philadelphia bring some cheering intelligence from the great exhibition.

Stewart's will is reported to be as entertaining as Gulliver's. His fall and imprisonment it appears were followed by the sale of his personal effects; the King having doubtless learned of the civilized mode of punishing traitors.

The letters of Mr. Bayard Taylor and of our regular correspondent in Philadelphia bring some cheering intelligence from the great exhibition.

serious, so much has been accomplished during a fortnight that we can predict an imposing display for the opening; and though the arrangements will be far from complete, yet the great central engine will not have to turn its idle shafting in vain.

Whether public charities will derive any considerable advantage from the injunction imposed upon Mrs. Stewart is a point upon which it does not become us to inquire too curiously. It may safely be assumed that the wife in whom the dead millionaire reposed such trust and confidence knows quite well what her purposes were and will faithfully carry them out.

The Fifteenth Ward Republican Association met the other night under circumstances so solemn and impressive that the members could give vent to their emotions in no other way than by a series of resolutions.

Nothing could exceed the interest such a publication would have for the ordinary reader. The services it would recount were rendered "in times of peril." Times of peril, possibly to the Republic, certainly to the President, to the Custom-house, to Jayne & Co., to various corporations, and to Henry Clews.

It is well understood that these disasters indicate, not the progress of a disease, but the progress of a cure. The mischief is done during the years of extravagant speculation and unbounded hope.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

“I hope I will need considerable thought and elaboration, I have made my will with ‘codicils’ in the present shape to guard against ‘any contingency, knowing I may rely upon your supplying all deficiencies on my part.’”

That was two years ago. Mr. Stewart had long made a close study of charitable enterprises, and he was an old man. But day after day there was still need of further thought and elaboration, further discussion and inquiry.

Whether public charities will derive any considerable advantage from the injunction imposed upon Mrs. Stewart is a point upon which it does not become us to inquire too curiously. It may safely be assumed that the wife in whom the dead millionaire reposed such trust and confidence knows quite well what her purposes were and will faithfully carry them out.

The Fifteenth Ward Republican Association met the other night under circumstances so solemn and impressive that the members could give vent to their emotions in no other way than by a series of resolutions.

Nothing could exceed the interest such a publication would have for the ordinary reader. The services it would recount were rendered "in times of peril." Times of peril, possibly to the Republic, certainly to the President, to the Custom-house, to Jayne & Co., to various corporations, and to Henry Clews.

It is well understood that these disasters indicate, not the progress of a disease, but the progress of a cure. The mischief is done during the years of extravagant speculation and unbounded hope.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

“I hope I will need considerable thought and elaboration, I have made my will with ‘codicils’ in the present shape to guard against ‘any contingency, knowing I may rely upon your supplying all deficiencies on my part.’”

That was two years ago. Mr. Stewart had long made a close study of charitable enterprises, and he was an old man. But day after day there was still need of further thought and elaboration, further discussion and inquiry.

Whether public charities will derive any considerable advantage from the injunction imposed upon Mrs. Stewart is a point upon which it does not become us to inquire too curiously. It may safely be assumed that the wife in whom the dead millionaire reposed such trust and confidence knows quite well what her purposes were and will faithfully carry them out.

The Fifteenth Ward Republican Association met the other night under circumstances so solemn and impressive that the members could give vent to their emotions in no other way than by a series of resolutions.

Nothing could exceed the interest such a publication would have for the ordinary reader. The services it would recount were rendered "in times of peril." Times of peril, possibly to the Republic, certainly to the President, to the Custom-house, to Jayne & Co., to various corporations, and to Henry Clews.

It is well understood that these disasters indicate, not the progress of a disease, but the progress of a cure. The mischief is done during the years of extravagant speculation and unbounded hope.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

“I hope I will need considerable thought and elaboration, I have made my will with ‘codicils’ in the present shape to guard against ‘any contingency, knowing I may rely upon your supplying all deficiencies on my part.’”

That was two years ago. Mr. Stewart had long made a close study of charitable enterprises, and he was an old man. But day after day there was still need of further thought and elaboration, further discussion and inquiry.

Whether public charities will derive any considerable advantage from the injunction imposed upon Mrs. Stewart is a point upon which it does not become us to inquire too curiously. It may safely be assumed that the wife in whom the dead millionaire reposed such trust and confidence knows quite well what her purposes were and will faithfully carry them out.

The Fifteenth Ward Republican Association met the other night under circumstances so solemn and impressive that the members could give vent to their emotions in no other way than by a series of resolutions.

Nothing could exceed the interest such a publication would have for the ordinary reader. The services it would recount were rendered "in times of peril." Times of peril, possibly to the Republic, certainly to the President, to the Custom-house, to Jayne & Co., to various corporations, and to Henry Clews.

It is well understood that these disasters indicate, not the progress of a disease, but the progress of a cure. The mischief is done during the years of extravagant speculation and unbounded hope.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.

For many years a favorite topic of speculation in New-York has been what Mr. Stewart would do with his money. He would give it all to his family. He would give it to the city. He would distribute it among benevolent institutions.