

THE PASSING THROG.

Charles L. Kurtz, the Republican National Com...
Senator John T. Morgan, of Alabama, is here on his way to a seaside resort for a rest. He said yesterday that he did not abandon...

THE TALK OF THE DAY.

The Dumdim bullet secured its name from the Indian arsenal by whose officers it was devised, and the name should not be spelled in two words or even hyphenated, as a great many people appear to think. Dumdim is a town and a district in the State of Durum in the Sudan, and also in the Spanish-American War, that the new magazine rifles, whose small caliber allow them to have greater accuracy and greater carrying power than the old weapons, were faulty in one important particular. The small caliber bullets have slight effect on those struck by them, and it was to obviate this difficulty that the Dumdim bullet was devised. This bullet is one from which part of the neck or copper jacket is made of lead, making a missile that inflicts a severe shattering wound.

to maintain the relations between the two republics; it has declared that those relations authorize it to interpose its good offices, in any contest between Liberia and a foreign State, and it has warned the world that a refusal to give the United States an opportunity to be heard for this purpose would make "an unfavorable impression upon the minds of the 'Government and the people of the United States.' Those declarations should be sufficient to indicate that the 'protection' needed, if the Liberian Government is really alarmed for its own safety, its appeal to the United States will doubtless not remain unheard or unanswered, and we have no idea that any Power will oppress Liberia in defiance of a remonstrance or other representation from this country. The suggestion that we should annex Liberia and admit it as a State of this Union is, of course, too fantastic for serious consideration. This is the United States of America, not of Africa and the uttermost ends of the earth.

DEALING WITH FEVER.

It was, no doubt, the merest chance coincidence that yellow fever broke out at Santiago de Cuba while General Wood was absent from that place. The disease would probably have made its appearance just the same if he had not been to the United States, but had remained at his post there night and day. In any case there can be no thought of laying upon him the slightest blame, nor of blaming his lieutenants who were in charge during his absence. He and they did their best to avert the scourge. They did, considering the conditions of the place, the limited means at their command and the shortness of the time, more than might naturally have been expected of them. When we consider that Santiago de Cuba is one of the hottest and least sanitary places on the whole island, that under Spanish rule its sanitary arrangements were neglected even to the point of neglecting the most elementary necessities, that it has been for many years the favorite hotbed of yellow fever, surpassing Havana in far in that odious pre-eminence, and that it suffered most of all Cuban cities from the ravages of war, it is evident that the total extirpation of the fever in the first season of American occupation was too much to expect. The fact that there has not been a widespread and devastating epidemic reflects the highest credit upon General Wood and his subordinates.

But the feature of the case which most appeals to present consideration is the way in which General Wood meets the emergency. He gets back to Santiago de Cuba to find the fever there. Compared with the usual outbreaks of former years, it is a mere trifle. That fact does not govern his conduct. He does not say lightly: "What of it? We still hold the city, don't we?" But in his view one single case of the disease is one too much. And so he flings himself into the task of stamping out the fever with all the energy and the resourcefulness he showed when he was confronted by the whole Spanish army on the field of battle. A year ago military conquest was the duty of the hour, and he devoted himself to its fulfillment with splendid gallantry and effectiveness. To-day sanitary conquest is the equally pressing duty, and to its performance he gives himself with equal zeal. Let us hope it will prove to be with equal effect.

His "heroic measures" for the stamping out of the fever are commendable, not only in their immediate and specific application, but in a far wider and more general sense. He is showing how fever should be dealt with at Santiago de Cuba. He is also showing how it should be dealt with wherever it makes its appearance on that island or elsewhere. And he is doing more than that. He is setting a fine example of the way in which we must deal, and of the only effective way in which we can deal, not only with fever, but with all the problems and burdens and difficulties arising out of the war. It is one thing to charge up San Juan Hill or to smash Cervera's fleet, but it is a far different, and neither less arduous nor less important, thing to eradicate yellow fever from the slums of Santiago de Cuba. It was one thing to rush past Corregidor and destroy Montofo's fleet at Cavite, and it was a splendid thing; and it was easy to support the whole Nation in admiration and support of it. It is now going to be a very different thing, and neither an easy nor a welcome task, to subdue revolt, win confidence and dispense civilization throughout the Philippines; but it is a task that must be done, and it would be an everlasting discredit to the Nation not to support the doing of it with a loyalty commensurate with the exultation that was expressed over the doing of Admiral Dewey's first great work in Manila Bay.

Altogether it is a political bankrupt turned prophet. He predicts that the Democracy will win next year if it mixes enough Altdemism with its principles. It was fated to Cassandra that she should always prophesy true and nobody should believe her. In like manner nobody believes Altdem, but Destiny has no league with him that his forecastings shall come true. After the election he may revise his vituperations in light of the fact that Democracy and Altdemism have gone down together in an undistinguishable rubbish heap. After that he should quit prophesy as well as politics, never having been an ornament of either.

DEVIL'S WORK ON DEVIL'S ISLE.

The hideous charges against Captain Dreyfus's late jailers are not denied. In the absence of denial, men will assume them to be true. It is declared, with circumstance and detail, that the prisoner was deliberately subjected to physical tortures of the most revolting kind as well as to indescribable insults and moral outrages. Why not? It has been openly admitted, and boasted, that he was thus treated to some extent before he left France, even before he was condemned or even brought to trial. Du Paty de Clam systematically tortured him while he was in jail under charges, but untried. If that was permissible then, what might not have been done after the sentence of living death had been pronounced and he was on the remote Devil's Isle? Every circumstance and known fact serves to corroborate the charges which are made, and which, as we have said, are not denied.

The only official comment made upon the charges is, indeed, something more than half a confession of their truth. The first statement is that no one in 1896 doubted the guilt of Captain Dreyfus. What then? Simply because his guilt was undoubted, was it right to impose upon him the horrors of the Inquisition? That is an explanation that damns those in whose behalf it is made. Next, it was reported that an American ship was going to his rescue. We should be loath to believe that any man in France or in the French colonies was so feather headed as to credit so absurd a tale. Yet, even so, did it in the least guard against such a rescue to torture the prisoner? Finally, no injury to his health has been reported by those who have seen him since his return to France. But is torture permissible, so long as the prisoner is able to endure it? And that is all the officials have to say. Practically it amounts to this: "Every one thought him guilty, so we shut him in a 'close, hot room with a bright light all night and swarms of venomous insects. We thought 'the Americans were coming to rescue him, so 'we fed him on offal. And, anyway, with all 'our ill treatment, we did not quite kill him.'"

Until the charges are denied, and unless they are refuted promptly, the world will believe they are true. Nor will it be at a loss for an explanation of the infamous work. Granted that Captain Dreyfus was innocent, and was condemned as the result of a wicked conspiracy, nothing was more natural than that the conspirators should wish for his death, in order that he might not be able to regain his freedom and prove his innocence. In his death the strongest proof of their own guilt would perish. Nor will it do to say they could scarcely be so vile as to have him tortured to death. If they did not hesitate to send an innocent man to lifelong punishment, they would not hesitate at anything. At present it seems probable that we shall have to make lasting record of the fact that the crowning part of the conspiracy was that Captain Dreyfus should not only be exiled, but should be driven to madness or to death by systematic and fiendish torture. If there were six murders a day in and around this city the public would be wild over the "epidemic of crime." If there were six deaths from cholera or yellow fever there would be a panic. But with six deaths in a day as the result of fever noise making on the Fourth of July we suppose the only thing to do is to hurrah for the Stars and Stripes and thank God we are no longer under the tyranny of King George.

If the newly incorporated New-Jersey ple trust has the effect of ameliorating the qualities of the habitual New-Jersey ple, nobody need complain of it. It will in that case be, like beauty, its own excuse for being. Of the effects of the primeval and traditional confection still current in that Commonwealth, the returned summer boarder is the melancholy sign. It is time that that familiar domestic composite was replaced by something else. If the new trust is able to this all ple eaters from one end of the State to the other will rise up and call it blessed. It must, however, be careful not to disappoint public expectation in a matter so critical. If it makes two good pies to grow where only one had one grew before, it will be a public benefactor; the reverse of the process working, of course, the other way. The trust, like a tree, will be judged by its fruits, and will meet popular approbation or censure according to its deserts.

General the Marquis de Galliffet, Minister of War of the French Republic, is ordering colonels and generals around and investigating their doings as though he were a "bigger man" than any Clam Patty of the lot. And we shouldn't wonder if he really were. The arrangement by which the Boston and Albany system is to come under the control of the New-York Central is likely to make material changes in the routes of both domestic and foreign trade. It is pointed out that Western freight coming by way of the New-York Central, intended for export, will probably be sent to Boston instead of New-York, because of the better terminal facilities there. At Boston, it is recalled, railroad trains can be run straight down to and upon the steamship pier, where the freight can be transferred directly from cars to ships, with a single handling and without cartage or lighterage. Beyond doubt, such terminal facilities give Boston a great advantage over New-York, the effects of which are to be seen in the more rapid growth of Boston's export trade. Such terminal facilities are not provided in New-York, partly because all the trunk lines but one fail to enter this city at all, and partly because neither city nor State nor Nation has yet got up enough gumption to provide harbor facilities at the point on tide-water reached by the one trunk line which does enter the city—and which, by perverse fatality, is the very one which may now transfer the bulk of its export freight to Boston. Perhaps the New-York Central, under the new arrangements, would run freight to Boston anyway. But it ought to have as good a chance to run its cars alongside ocean steamers at Port Morris as it will have at Boston Harbor.

Dewey says the police cannot be expected to be on the spot whenever a crime is committed. No, the police really cannot commit all the crimes themselves. That would be a Crime Trust, obnoxious to the rest of the party. In the ashes of Coxey survive the wonted fires of Coxey, now being blown up to be ready for the coming campaign. No sign of his intended tactics has yet been given, and he is as likely to appear on one side as on the other, or skirmish around on his own hook, the enemy of both and the ally of neither. It will not be easy to keep him off the grass in a political crisis so urgent. He sticks to his old theory that the Government ought to issue irredeemable bonds in unlimited amount and distribute them generally among the people. His financial theories thus bear a kind of remote family resemblance to those of Bryan, whom he may be supposed supporting when the time comes, a picturesque political figure carrying the spectacular force of an entire circus.

Sir Richard Webster, it is announced, will today finish his opening speech in the Venezuela arbitration at Paris. He began it on June 15, and has been engaged upon the delivery of it, with intervals of rest and refreshment, ever since. When he finally sits down the president of the court will say: "With these few preliminary remarks, we will now proceed to a detailed consideration of the case."

Altdem is a political bankrupt turned prophet. He predicts that the Democracy will win next year if it mixes enough Altdemism with its principles. It was fated to Cassandra that she should always prophesy true and nobody should believe her. In like manner nobody believes Altdem, but Destiny has no league with him that his forecastings shall come true. After the election he may revise his vituperations in light of the fact that Democracy and Altdemism have gone down together in an undistinguishable rubbish heap. After that he should quit prophesy as well as politics, never having been an ornament of either.

PERSONAL.

The Baker gift of $100 for the best music for a Dartmouth College song has just been awarded to Addison F. Andrews, of this city, a graduate of Dartmouth in the class of '78. A similar prize for the words had been previously given to Professor Richard Henry Stoddard, but not until now awarded. The competition in the case of the words was confined to Dartmouth men, but any composer was permitted to compete for the music prize. Nevertheless, a Dartmouth man appeared with the required composition.

Erik Skram, of Copenhagen, a secretary of the Danish Legation, is in Chicago on a semi-official mission, is commissioned by his Government to investigate the condition of the Danes in America, and will later make a report of his observations. The Danish Government is paying the expenses of Mr. Skram's trip through the United States. Besides his work of investigation he is trying to interest his countrymen in a society formed in Denmark for the purpose of promoting commercial ties between the two countries. Mr. Skram will talk with our consular officials, and will journey to the Pacific coast.

The oldest surviving ex-Senator of the United States is James War Bradbury, of Maine, who has just celebrated his ninety-seventh birthday. His practice of law extended over a period of seventy-two years, for a part of his career was permitted to the President Hannibal Hamlin was his colleague. Judge Archibald A. Glenn, formerly State Senator and Lieutenant-Governor of Illinois, has been elected City Treasurer of Chicago. He is a resident of this city, and is seventy years of age. He has been a member of the City of Chicago for many years, and has been a member of the City of Chicago for many years. He has been a member of the City of Chicago for many years, and has been a member of the City of Chicago for many years.

- Amusements. AMERICAN ROOF GARDEN—Vaudeville. CASINO—The Rounders. SEVEN MILES—Wax Works, Grand Concert and Cinematograph. KEITHS—12.30 p. m.—Continous Performance. KOSTER & HIALS—7.30 to 11 a. m.—Vaudeville. LEON ROOF GARDEN—Cinema. NEW THEATRE—8.15—The Man in the Moon—Vaudeville. PASTORS—Continous Performance. MANHATTAN BEACH—4-7—Sons of Sam—Band—5—Pain's Flowers—4—A Minstrel. NICHOLAS GARDEN—8.15—Popular Orchestral Concerts. VICTORIA ROOF GARDEN—Vaudeville.

Index to Advertisements. Table with columns for Page No., Col., and Page No. containing various ad categories like Amusements, Bankers & Brokers, etc.

Business Notices. Roll Top Desks and Office Furniture. Great Variety of Style and Price. T. G. SELLEW, No. 111 Fulton St.

New-York Daily Tribune. THURSDAY, JULY 13, 1899.

THE NEWS THIS MORNING.

FOREIGN.—The steamer Paris was towed into Falmouth Harbor shortly after midnight. Admiral Dewey has quarantined the city of Santiago and adopted other vigorous methods to check the spread of yellow fever. Admiral Dewey reached Suez on the Olympia yesterday morning. The Yule and Harvard athletic teams reached Southampton on the St. Louis last evening, in excellent condition. The Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company is to build a big plant at Manchester, England.

DOMESTIC.—Secretary Alger said that he expected to stay in the Cabinet at least for the remainder of this year, and added that he did not propose to retire under fire. The President appointed Colonel Alfred E. Bates Paymaster-General of the Army, to succeed General Aza B. Carey, retired. The lie was passed between Senators Gallinger and Chandler at the hearing on charges against the former in Concord, N. H., and the two nearly came to blows. There was much excitement in Detroit over the efforts toward tentative municipal ownership of the street railroads of the city. The Kentucky Republican State Convention to nominate candidates for Governor and the Supreme Court opened in Lexington. The National Educational Association continued in session in Los Angeles. Treasonable and incendiary placards were placed in prominent places in Boston. The State Board of Charities met at Albany.

CITY.—Stocks were strong and higher. Winners at Brighton: Theory, Posthaste, St. Cloud, Big Gun, Greyfield and Dudley E. A heavy thunderstorm passed over the city in the evening. The Yale and Harvard athletic teams were received in order from Justice Stover directing the Municipal Assembly and the Board of Estimate to show cause why they should not be mandamus and compelled to issue bonds for the new Hall, retired. The Lie was passed between Senators Gallinger and Chandler at the hearing on charges against the former in Concord, N. H., and the two nearly came to blows. There was much excitement in Detroit over the efforts toward tentative municipal ownership of the street railroads of the city. The Kentucky Republican State Convention to nominate candidates for Governor and the Supreme Court opened in Lexington. The National Educational Association continued in session in Los Angeles. Treasonable and incendiary placards were placed in prominent places in Boston. The State Board of Charities met at Albany.

THE WEATHER.—Forecast for to-day: Showers. The temperature yesterday: Highest, 80 degrees; lowest, 63; average, 74 1/2.

IRON SUPPLY AND DEMAND.

It is about time to express a doubt whether the scarcity of pig iron is real. No one can deny that quantities for sale are far below the demand. Many people are in trouble for that reason, and some foundries and other concerns are stopping for want of the iron they need, which they could not get in time if they ordered it, or cannot buy it. That sense there is scarcity. But the great steel making companies are not stopping production, and have provided themselves with material far ahead of their requirements. It may be safely asserted that many other concerns have done the same, buying from four to six months ahead, in part to guard against prices being put up against them and in part to make sure that prices shall be put up against other people. The quantity supplied was not quite equal to consumption in May, and whether it has equalled consumption in June it was at any rate largely absorbed by a few big buyers. They have stocks for months ahead, and are comfortably protected, while others are less sagacious cannot get iron. Still it remains an open question whether the orders now being accepted call for consumption of as much iron as is produced.

The point is that the great works are running mainly on orders which cover their entire output for months ahead, in several lines to the end of the year. They have bought material ahead of present needs, as they should in self-protection. That has created a present scarcity for those who have not material enough to meet the orders they have or wish to take. But the question whether new orders are equal to the actual output of the material is quite another matter. As these orders are offered to one large concern after another, which cannot take them and promise delivery within the required time, they probably are largely, and certainly are to some extent, reported from different cities. All of them thus reported appear to have exceeded the known capacity of the works capable of filling them. Nobody can tell how many of them are prompted by desire to get contracts fixed before a further possible advance occurs in prices of materials or of finished products.

A state of things like this usually ends with rather surprising suddenness. As old orders run out and works begin to take such new orders as are offered the many reported at different points shrink to one, and the multitude who have desired to anticipate advance in prices hold back, and soon it appears that the works, having done in six months all that was needed for a year, have for the next six months considerably less to do. Prices then operate powerfully to hold back orders, because it is quickly perceived that the turning point has been reached and that producers will soon be wanting consumers as much as consumers were wanting producers. Several such rapid changes have been recorded, and when any such reaction comes it will be found that the quantity of iron required to do a year's work in half a year is much larger than the quantity required to do within another half year its natural work. Whether this change of front is near or remote cannot be determined by men outside the business, and may perhaps be more than the best informed men in the business can predict, because they know only of inquiries sent to them with rising markets, but do not know of those received by others, nor how many go to several different works, nor how many would be held back if prices should halt. After a rise of 100 per cent or more in some products it

Lawrence Godkin, as referee, filed his report of the proofs of the accounting of the executors of the will of Samuel J. Tilden, in the Supreme Court yesterday. The accounts embrace the distribution of the estate under an agreement reached by the executors on the 13th of March last, to carry out the provisions of the will and the decision of the Court of Appeals, which upset the residuary clause of the will. It is shown that the Tilden trust in the New-York Public Library, comprising the Lenox, Astor and Tilden foundations, has received $2,539,931.55. George H. Tilden, Samuel J. Tilden, Jr., Henry E. Swan, Caroline B. Whitteley, Ruby Tilden Payne and Susan Tilden Sabn, have each received $464,992.20.

The winding up of the estate has not yet been completed, the accounts passed on by the referee only running to the end of March last. All of the real estate has not yet been sold, and the amount at New-Lebanon to Mr. Tilden's memory has not yet been entirely paid. Besides the money received for realty, the executors have a sum of $20,137.27 in cash about $10,000. They have not carried out the provisions of the will providing for the collection and publication of the papers and manuscripts of Mr. Tilden.

W. W. ASTOR'S TAXES.

Justice Stover directs the tax commissioners to review their decision. William Waldorf Astor, of London, yesterday, through his counsel, Charles A. Peabody, secured from Justice Stover, in the Supreme Court, a writ of certiorari directing the Commissioners of Taxes and Assessments to review their decision in assessing his personal property here at $2,000,000. The writ is returnable on the first Monday in October, in Special Term, Part III of the Supreme Court. The grounds that are set up by Mr. Astor for the reversal of the assessment are the usual ones that the books of the Tax Commissioners were open from the second Monday in January until May for the purpose of permitting any person assessed to object to the amount of his assessment. Mr. Astor further alleges that the personal property on which he has been assessed by the Commission is not his, but is held in trust for the benefit of others.

William Waldorf Astor, of London, yesterday, through his counsel, Charles A. Peabody, secured from Justice Stover, in the Supreme Court, a writ of certiorari directing the Commissioners of Taxes and Assessments to review their decision in assessing his personal property here at $2,000,000. The writ is returnable on the first Monday in October, in Special Term, Part III of the Supreme Court. The grounds that are set up by Mr. Astor for the reversal of the assessment are the usual ones that the books of the Tax Commissioners were open from the second Monday in January until May for the purpose of permitting any person assessed to object to the amount of his assessment. Mr. Astor further alleges that the personal property on which he has been assessed by the Commission is not his, but is held in trust for the benefit of others.

AMUSING INCIDENTS IN THE COUNTRY—INTERESTING LETTER FROM THE REV. MR. THOMPSON.

The following letter will be of interest to those who remember that 33 children were sent by the Tribune Fresh Air Fund to Kingston, Penn.; Wyoming, Penn., and nearby places last Friday: To the Manager of The Tribune Fresh Air Fund: My Dear Sir: Several incidents have occurred since the Fresh Air children were sent to the country. Many of them have never been outside of the great city of New-York, and, of course, since they were sent to the country, they have been in a home saw upon her arrival there a cat for the first time. She appeared to be afraid of the cat, and she was being held by the woman who had her hands a handkerchief and for two or three days she went about the house most of the time with her hands thus covered. But she is now a cat, and she is good friends now. She says she is going to take a kitty home with her. There is a family entertaining a colored boy from Brooklyn, the next morning, for his arrival he saw something like berries hanging on a tree, and he asked what they were. He was informed that they were cherries, and he was given the privilege of going up the tree and eating all he could in twenty minutes. A little girl, when asked by her host what her father did, said: "Oh, he blows the harp." It was unnecessary to inquire her nationality. Down at Kingston, where a large number of children are spending two weeks, a husband and wife were entertaining two boys. The other morning they observed a young man who was very young, and was not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised, and they asked what they were doing there. "We are trying to catch bicycles." The boys came from all places of the excellent behavior of these children. In manners and general deportment they surpass many of the native children. The impression is that they are a very good set of boys, and they are doing very well. They are not in the house. They began an investigation, and soon discovered them on the sidewalk. They were a good deal surprised