LIBERTY OF TEACHING.

DR. HENRY VAN DYKE DECLARES AND DEFENDS HIS OPINION.

To the Editor of The Tribune.

Sir: "I do not believe in the free silver theory. Yet I would rather see that theory prevail than see a university professor silenced by mere authority, and without good reasons, clearly stated and frankly maintained."

That is what I said, and that is what I stand by. Without liberty of thought and speech, intellectual despotism is inevitable, and research is impossible.

Such institutions are legitimate and probably necessary. For example, almost all theological seminaries belong to this class. They are avowedly founded to train men for the Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian or Episcopal ministry.

Even in a university there are certain general standards which are openly acknowledged and therefore binding. For example, Princeton is frankly founded on a Christian basis.

Let us suppose that your absurd illustration is a fact. Suppose a professor of literature teaches that Tupper is superior to Shakespeare as a poet.

Let us suppose that your absurd illustration is a fact. Suppose a professor of literature teaches that Tupper is superior to Shakespeare as a poet.

But suppose another case. Suppose a professor, in a university which claims to stand on a broad basis of loyalty to truth, arrives at certain views on the questions of coolie immigration, or on the municipal ownership of street railroads, which are distasteful to the founder of the university, or to the trustees, or to the president.

The institution which follows such a course is bound to avow its position as a college and corporation university. Then the public will always know where to find it.

The freedom of academic teaching, however, is plainly inconsistent with stock position. The great body of universities regard their intellectual liberty as the safeguard of their integrity, the guarantee of their sincerity and the guide to sound views.

It is estimated that the building will cost about $200,000. The company will be organized under the laws of this State and will be capitalized at $100,000.

MASONIC BUILDING TO COST $200,000.

If the plans of the Brooklyn Masonic Temple Company are carried out Masons and members of other societies in Brooklyn will soon have provided for them a suitable building in which to meet. It is proposed to erect a six story freestone building...
