

SEVENTH'S SHAM BATTLE.

CADETS AND STATE TROOP FIGHT AT PEEKSKILL HOLLOW.

State Camp, Peekskill, N. Y., June 17 (Special).—After experiencing many hardships and sustaining losses upon the first day of the sham battle...

It was not until further along the road that the cadets were subjected to some of the long range firing of the 7th's rear guard. With the main body of the cadets' light battery, and early in the conflict with the rear guard it was brought into action...

Meantime the rear guard, under Captain Davidson, had been attacked as they were crossing the bridge at the pump house, the entire main body of the cadets developing along the hill, where the cavalry was subjected for some time to the long range firing of the 7th's rear guard.

The cadets will remain in camp only until tomorrow when they will break camp and return to West Point. They are thoroughly enjoying the outing, and are deeply interested in the object of the exercise.

The officers who came down with the cadet corps were Colonel Charles G. Treat, commander of the 7th, Captain George S. Waterbury, 15th United States Cavalry, Captain J. K. Thompson, 15th United States Cavalry, Captain E. Anderson, 7th United States Cavalry, Captain J. Greble, United States Artillery Corps, and Lieutenant Sumner, 4th United States Cavalry.

FOR LEGIBLE STREET SIGNS.

THE MUNICIPAL ART SOCIETY WILL PRESENT SUGGESTIONS ON THE SUBJECT TO THE ALDERMEN—JOHN A. SLEICHER'S DESIGN.

In a few days the Municipal Art Society, composed of Nelson S. Spencer, Charles R. Lamb, Milo R. Marbois and others, will report to the Board of Aldermen their most practical suggestions in regard to street signs, and will favor those that will enable pedestrians and persons who ride on surface cars to tell at a glance what street they are on, and which is the bisecting street.

A DESIGN FOR A STREET SIGN.

Among the designs submitted, one by John A. Sleicher, Editor of "Leslie's Weekly," has attracted notice and received favorable comment. Mr. Sleicher's design is simple, and gives the desired information at a glance.
