

LITERARY NOTES.

Mrs. Mary White, having become interested in the collection of baskets, found a woful lack of literature on the subject, and therefore was moved to produce from her knowledge and enthusiasm of a collector her treatise on "How to Make Baskets," which Doubleday, Page & Co. are bringing out. This is expected to be the final authority on all sorts of basketry, from a work basket to a wicker chair for the piazza.

In "Shacklet, a Story of American Politics," the author, Walter Barr, who is a new writer known hitherto only through his magazine stories, has undertaken to exploit a field comparatively undeveloped. It is a story of politics in the West, and the central figure passes through various stages as clerk, lobbyist, legislator and governor.

Another book is promised in the early autumn from "Zack," known in private life as Gwendoline Keats. It will be called "Dunstable Weir," and will consist of a collection of short stories. Scribner, who published her novel, "The White Cottage," last spring, will also publish this.

Through misunderstanding, announcement was made in this column the other day that Maurice Hewlett's new book, "New Canterbury Tales," was to be illustrated by W. H. Hyde in the English edition, but not in the American. As a matter of fact, neither edition is to be illustrated at all.

The publication of General Alger's book on "The Spanish-American War," which the Harper intended to bring out on September 20, has been postponed for a short time, to a date not yet definitely decided upon.

The Putnam's edition of "Chatterfield's Letters to His Son," which they are going to publish in their Library of Standard Literature in two volumes, is said to be the first American edition of that book. It has been carefully edited by Charles Strachey and A. Calthrop.

Another Polish novelist is to appear before this public, bearing the name of Eliza Orzeszko. Her book, which the Scribners will publish, is called "The Argonauts," and is translated by Jeremiah Curtin, the translator of Sienkiewicz's books into English. Mme. Orzeszko's previous stories are said to have given her considerable vogue in her native land.

The first volume of the Macmillan Company's "American Sportsman's Library" makes a timely appearance this autumn. It is devoted to "Upland Game Birds," and is by Emerson Hough, who, like all the writers selected for the series, is an authority on the subject of which he treats. There will be a frontispiece by Frost and seven full page illustrations by L. A. Fuertes.

Harper & Bros. say that the advance orders for Gilbert Parker's novel, "The Right of Way," have been larger than for any other recent publication of theirs, with the exception of Mrs. Humphry Ward's "Eleanor." It will appear on the 20th.

Mr. Howard C. Hillgas naturally had some desire last June to know what reasons the English authorities in South Africa would give for the suppression of his book, "The Boers in War"—in its English edition called "The Boer Forces." So he wrote and asked them, and has received the following impressive but scarcely satisfactory reply:

The Castle, Cape Town, July 29, 1901. Sir: In reply to your letter dated June 20, 1901, asking to be informed of the reasons which led to the suppression of your book, "The Boers in War," I am directed to inform you that the general officer commanding Cape Colony District regrets to report that he is unable to gratify your curiosity on the subject. I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant, PERCY M. CLARENCE, Captain, D. A. G., Cape Colony District.

Walter Crane has designed an elaborate series of illustrations for Lamb's "Masque of Days" from the "Last Essays of Elia"—"newly dressed and decorated," as the title page truly represents, as the designs are in Mr. Crane's familiar decorative vein, in colors, with the text put in old-fashioned lettering in the plates.

In his "Francis, the Little Poor Man of Assisi," which Longmans, Green & Co. have in press, James Adderley disclaims making any original contribution to the study of the life of St. Francis. He has relied chiefly on Sabatier's work to whom, he says, we owe the very much truer conception of Francis and his work that we now possess. Mr. Sabatier has contributed an introduction to the book.

The first volume of the Macmillan Company's "Dictionary of Philosophy and Psychology," under the editorship of Professor James Mark Baldwin, of Princeton, is now ready. The work will be completed in three volumes. The first extends from A to Law. The work has been in preparation for several years, and its contributors comprise many leading scholars in philosophy and science both at home and abroad. It devotes much space to science, as well as to philosophy; such topics as biology, for instance, in which great advances have been made in recent years, receive much attention.

Lieutenant Elliott, U. S. N., of the Naval War College, has written a life of Rear-Admiral Winslow, the commander of the Kearsarge in her famous fight with the Alabama. The Putnam will publish it. The book will make known for the first time a mass of important correspondence relating to the fight, and to the international discussion brought about by the action of one English yacht that rescued many of the survivors of the Alabama, after that vessel was sunk. Admiral Winslow's life extended over a crucial period in naval history, and his biography involves a history of the beginnings of the iron clad naval ship.

The new volume in the Appleton's "Great Commanders" series is on General McClellan, and is by the late General Peter S. Michie. General Michie has the advantage of the perspective gained in the years that have elapsed since McClellan's work at the head of the Army of the Potomac, as well as military knowledge and familiarity with the later literature of the war. While fully recognizing McClellan's ability as an organizer and his power to secure the devotion of his soldiers, he has placed due emphasis on his excessive prudence, and on the deficiencies of his information service.

In his forthcoming book, called "The Parts of Speech," Professor Brander Matthews sets forth the contention that the English language belongs to the peoples who speak it; that the American branch of the language is destined at no distant day to assume the controlling position heretofore and now held by the parent branch in England. Professor Matthews also holds radical views on orthography, which he enforces by innovations in his own text.

E. K. Benson, whose story of the Civil War, "Who Goes There?" attracted attention last year, has now another war story, the scene of which is in the Virginia campaign, of Grant and Lee, said to be detailed with historic accuracy. The Macmillan Company has it nearly ready for publication, under the title of "A Friend with the Countersign." It involves, as did the author's previous work, a curious mental condition on the part of the hero.

The perennial interest in the study of the growth and development of language is said to be exemplified in a new book of popular philology by Professor Greenough, late of the Latin department, and Professor Kittredge, of the English department, of Harvard University. It is entitled "Words and Their Ways in English Speech," and is to be published at once by the Macmillan Company. The authors set out to answer the thousand questions continually asked by intelligent persons in regard to their mother tongue, and have had as their guiding principle in treating the subject from many different points of view the connection between the history of language and the history of civilization.

"Gardening for Beginners: A Handbook of the Garden" (Charles Scribner's Sons), by Mr. E. T. Cook, is precisely the kind of volume which beginners will want. Except for a very brief preface by Miss Gertrude Jekyll, that delightful authority, there is nothing within these many pages which does not deal strictly with matters of fact. The author is neither pedantic nor badly descriptive; but he realizes to the full that the beginner needs advice, practical advice, and not fine writing. The great mass of information brought together here is conveniently arranged, and the illustrations are among the best halftone reproductions from photographs we have ever seen. In a word, we recommend this book most cordially to the amateur in gardening.

D'RI AND I

By IRVING BACHELLER, Author of "EBEN HOLDEN"

Of courage that can never be shaken, of loyalty that stands firm in the face of death, of endurance that is proof against savage hardships, and of homely wisdom that always has a proverb to fit the case in hand, D'ri is a character whom it is good to know. His many shrewd sayings would fill out a book of homespun proverbs, and they go far to give the touch of every-day truth that anchors this book firmly to the realities.—San Francisco Chronicle.
