SEVENTH REGIMENT ELECTION.

Company D of the 7th Regiment has elected Captain John Bissell second lieutenant after a lively contest. It is usual in the 7th for promotion to follow by seniority, but in this case the rule was not observed. First Sergeant Dougherty was the next in line for promotion, and none of the sergeants would run against him. The company was divided over the matter, but the resignation of Myers is received. Lieutenant Power will be elected captain, and Second Lieutenant Daniel will go up to first lieutenant.

A DIFFERENCE IN CONDITIONS.

Irving Batcheller, the author, tells the following story of an incident connected with a recent visit made by him to his old home in the "north country." He had driven out through the country to the old homestead, and was sitting in his carriage, talking with the present proprietor, to whom he had disclosed his identity, when a neighbor came up. After being introduced, the neighbor, glancing round at the general air of shiftlessness and decay, said to Batcheller: "Place used to look better when your father run it."
