

TUNNEL BILL APPROVED.

P. R. R. FRANCHISE PASSED BY SENATE AND ASSEMBLY.

DEMOCRATS OPPOSE THE MEASURE—SENATOR STRANAHAN'S ARGUMENTS—KELSEY ANSWERS TAMMANY.

Albany, Feb. 26 (Special).—The bill which authorizes the Board of Aldermen of the city of New-York, with the approval of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, to grant a franchise for a tunnel under the North River, the island of Manhattan, the East River and a part of the Borough of Brooklyn, such as is contemplated by the Pennsylvania Railroad, passed the Assembly this morning by a vote of 86 yeas and 43 nays. A few minutes later the bill passed the Senate by a vote of 29 to 13.

In the Assembly the Brooklyn representatives, both Democratic and Republican, appeared to be in opposition to the measure. The Democrats voted solidly against it, and so did the following Republicans:

Adams, Ash, J. A. Allen, Grady, Haviland, Langhorst, Mance, McQuade, Hendry, Rainey, Remsen, Traub, Weber, Wilson and Woody.

In the Senate all the Republicans voted for the bill, together with Senator McCarran, Democrat, of Brooklyn.

In this House Senator Stranahan, who introduced the bill in the Senate, replied to the opposition by saying that the granting of the franchise was left entirely with the local authorities, and that the only reason the franchise was for an indefinite period was that so great an improvement could not be undertaken with a franchise of short duration. The Senator from Onwego added, however, that the city had full power to regulate the compensation which the railroad is to grant for the franchise, and to refix the rate at intervals of not more than twenty-five years. In this way, he said, the interests of the city were fully protected. Senators Grady, Hennessey and Trainor spoke against the bill.

In the Assembly, Assemblymen Smith, Sanders, Duross, Barrett, Dale, Fitzgerald, Palmer, Townsend and Finch spoke in opposition, whereas Assemblymen Kelsey, Allis, Newcomb, Seymour, Morgan and Bennett spoke in support of the measure.

To the charge, made by the Tammany members, that the bill gave to the Board of Aldermen power to grant the franchise only for the reason that it was now out of the power of Tammany, Mr. Kelsey said:

The fusionists have only a small majority in the Board of Aldermen. A three-fourths vote is necessary to grant this franchise, and hence it will require the votes of Democratic members. Tammany Hall has always cried for home rule, when it was in power, but now that it is down and out, it cries out against such a home rule measure as this. I understand the people want this bill, and that it will render possible an improvement which will have tremendous advantages for the commerce of the city of New-York.

Assemblyman Duross (Tammany) offered an amendment providing that the Board of Aldermen should determine the fare charged in the tunnel and the length of the franchise. The amendment was lost.

BRITISH FEAR BAD NEWS.

FOUR HUNDRED MEN AND TWO GUNS MAY HAVE BEEN CAPTURED.

(Copyright, 1902, by The Tribune Association.)

London, Feb. 27, 1 a. m.—The twenty-first anniversary of Majuba and the second of Cronje's surrender at Paardeberg finds England apprehensive with regard to the latest news from South Africa.

Lord Kitchener's two telegrams, which are published this morning, fail to give sufficient details for adequate comment, but it is feared that there has been a serious British reverse in the Western Transvaal, and that at least four hundred men and two guns have been captured. The fighting occurred near Klerksdorp, in De La Rey's country.

"The Express" says Prince Henry may pay a visit to Canada on the termination of his stay in the United States. A proposal on the part of the Kaiser to that effect has, it is said, been favorably received by King Edward.

SHARP FIGHTING IN SOUTH AFRICA. BOERS ATTACK AND CAPTURE A STRONGLY GUARDED CONVOY.

London, Feb. 26.—A dispatch from Lord Kitchener, made public to-day, says:

A convoy of empty wagons was attacked and captured by the Boers southwest of Klerksdorp, Transvaal Colony, February 24. The escort consisted of a force of the Imperial Yeomanry, three companies of the Northumberland Fusiliers, and two guns. The fighting was severe, but had no further details.

Lord Kitchener also reports that six hundred Boers, driving cattle, rushed the outpost line near Botha's Berg, Transvaal Colony, during the night of February 23, and that some of them got through. The Boers left fifteen dead and six wounded on the field.

Pretoria, Feb. 26.—In the attempt made by six hundred Boers to break north through the Vrode blockhouse line, held by the columns under Byng and Rimington, the brunt of the fighting fell on the New-Zealanders. The British losses were two officers and eighteen men killed and five officers and thirty-three men wounded.

PRINCE HENRY INVITED TO CANADA.

Ottawa, Ont., Feb. 26.—Prince Henry of Prussia has been invited by the Governor General of Canada to visit him in the vice-regal residence in Ottawa. Answer from the Prince has not yet been received.

OFFICER UNDER PRINCE'S HORSE.

While attempting to step out of the way of an approaching carriage in front of Sherry's yesterday, Detective Sergeant Mangin, of Inspector Thompson's staff, moved directly in front of the carriage occupied by Prince Henry. The carriage pole struck the detective on the head, knocking him down. Before he could move one of the horses stepped on the man's side. Thomas Carey, who has driven the Prince about the city since his arrival, was on the box. Mangin was carried into Sherry's, where he was attended by a physician. The sergeant received a slight scalp wound and a slight bruise on his side. He was sent home in a carriage.

ARRANGEMENT OF THE TABLES IN THE GRAND BALL ROOM OF THE WALDORF-ASTORIA AT THE "NEW-YORKER STAATS-ZEITUNG" DINNER.

MEETS INDUSTRIES' CAPTAINS.

THE PRINCE AT LUNCHEON WITH MANY OF AMERICA'S REPRESENTATIVE BUSINESS MEN.

MUCH INTERESTED IN THIS COUNTRY'S PROSPERITY.

Prince Henry met at a luncheon at Sherry's yesterday 122 of the foremost financiers and business men of the United States.

The luncheon had been planned over a month ago, when it was learned that the Prince had expressed a desire to meet the leaders of American industry. For nearly three hours he sat and chatted with his hosts, questioning them in an informal way about the extent and character of American business enterprises, and showing lively interest in the reasons they advanced for the present remarkable prosperity of America.

The invited guests included Prince Henry and his suite, the "Captains of Industry," so termed by the hosts; United States Government representatives, the Mayor of New-York, the commodore of the New-York Yacht Club, and officials of German steamship lines. The hosts were J. Pierpont Morgan, George F. Baker, Morris K. Jesup, John Claffin, Edward D. Adams, Elbert H. Gary, Abram S. Hewitt, William Rockefeller, Levi P. Morton, James Stillman, Alexander E. Orr, William K. Vanderbilt and L. M. Goldberg.

THE PRINCE'S ARRIVAL.

It was only a second or two after 12.30 p. m. when the Prince's escort of mounted police and Troop C, swung around the corner of Forty-fourth-st. and Fifth-ave., coming from the Hohenzollern. A few seconds later the carriage in which Prince Henry rode stopped at the Forty-fourth-st. entrance of Sherry's. The men of Troop C formed a line along the north curb and as the Prince alighted, saluted him. Hundreds of people were scattered along the streets near the restaurant. The police had established a line at Fifth-ave. and another in Forty-fourth-st., just beyond the entrance to Sherry's. The space about the doorways was kept well cleared. As the open barouches reached Forty-fourth-st., the crowd broke into a cheer, which the visitor acknowledged by raising his chapeau. With the Prince was Rear-Admiral Evans.

In carriages behind that of the royal visitor were the members of his suite, officers of the Hohenzollern and the other delegates of the President. Mayor Low came along in an automobile.

THE DECORATIONS.

Luncheon was served in the grand ballroom, which was beautifully decorated. Around the crescent shaped tables tennis nets, intertwined with roses and smilax, were spread. Colored electric lights shone among the blossoms. At the ends of each table had been placed silver jardinières, filled with American Beauty roses. At the entrance of the ballroom stood standards of the United States and Germany. The walls were covered with tapestries.

At the Prince's table twenty-four persons were seated, and at each of the other tables sat twelve men. The crescent tables were arranged to face the Prince, the guests sitting on the convex sides of the tables. A broad aisle led from the elevators to the main table.

The galleries overlooking the ballroom were filled with handsomely gowned women.

PRECAUTIONS BY THE POLICE.

Great care was taken to exclude every one but the guests from the main hallway and staircase at Sherry's. Twenty-five Central Office detectives were scattered about the staid and entrance to the ballroom, while seventy-five policemen, under command of Inspector Thompson, were close to the doors of the building. The attendants were in smart uniforms of green broadcloth coats, with black shoulder knots and cords, yellow satin waistcoats with gold braid, black knee breeches with silver knee buckles, black silk stockings and patent leather shoes.

The luncheon lasted about one hour. During this time the Prince, who appeared to have fully recovered from his arduous social duties of the previous day, showed the greatest interest in all that happened. He chatted pleasantly with Mr. Morgan and Mr. Jesup, and appeared to be thoroughly enjoying himself. When the luncheon was ended Mr. Morgan proposed a toast to President Roosevelt. It was drunk in silence, all standing. Then Mr. Morgan proposed a toast to Emperor William. In drinking this toast present stood. Soon afterward Mr. Morgan proposed a third toast—to Prince Henry. The Prince saluted gracefully, and bowed repeatedly at the applause which followed. He offered a toast to the "Captains of Industry." Then Mr. Morgan proposed a toast to "The Ladies." All the men rose, faced the galleries and drank.

ALL PRESENTED TO THE PRINCE.

Tables were pushed to one side with the lighting of cigars, and every one had an opportunity to meet the Prince. As the line of guests advanced to the head table, Mr. Morgan and Mr. Jesup introduced each man to Prince Henry, designating the bank, business or corporation in connection with which the name of the guest presented was best known. Prince Henry smiled pleasantly and shook hands heartily at each presentation. He had a special greeting for each guest. The officers of the Hohenzollern and the Prince's suite were made acquainted with the other guests. When the courtesies had been exchanged, Mr. Morgan gave the Emperor's brother an illuminated booklet, wherein was printed the name of each guest, together with a brief sketch of his position in the industrial and financial world.

PRESS'S GREETING TO PRINCE.

GREAT GATHERING OF NEWSPAPER MEN AT THE DINNER OF THE "NEW-YORKER STAATS-ZEITUNG."

RESPONSE OF HENRY AND MESSAGE FROM EMPEROR.

Mr. Toastmaster and Gentlemen: I am fully aware of the fact that I am the guest and in the presence of the representatives of the press of the United States, and in particular the guest of the "New-Yorker Staats-Zeitung," both of which I wish to thank for the kind invitation and reception I have met with to-night.

Before entering into details, I should like all of you to understand that I consider this meeting, though it may be looked upon as official, as a private one, and that it is my wish that none of you will take advantage of what is said or spoken after leaving this table.

Undoubtedly the press of our day is a factor, if not a power, which may not be neglected, and which I should like to compare with ever so many submarine mines, which blow up in many cases in the most unexpected manner; but your own naval history teaches us not to mind mines, should they ever be in our way. The language used on this memorable occasion was stronger than ever I would venture to reproduce here to-night. I need only mention the name of Fremont. Another comparison might be more to your taste, gentlemen, and is, in fact, more complimentary; it is one which my majesty the Emperor used before I left. He said: "You will meet many members of the press, and I wish you, therefore, to keep in mind that the press men in the United States rank almost with my generals in command."

It will interest you, I know, to learn something about the nature of my mission to this country. The facts are as follows: His majesty the Emperor has minutely studied the recent and rapid development of the United States, and his majesty is well aware of the fact that yours is a fast moving nation. His sending me to this country may therefore be looked upon as an act of friendship and courtesy, with the aim of promoting friendly relations between Germany and the United States, should you be willing to grasp a proffered hand, you will find such a one on the other side of the Atlantic Ocean.

(Speech of Prince Henry at the dinner given by the "New-Yorker Staats-Zeitung.")

Prince Henry was dined right royally at the Waldorf-Astoria last night, over twelve hundred officers, publishers, soldiers, sailors, statesmen, managers and others among the most prominent in various walks of American life having assembled to do him honor at the invitation of the "New-Yorker Staats-Zeitung," the foremost representative of German journalism in this country. Seldom, if ever, has a more distinguished assembly been gathered together in this country at any dinner, private or public, and certainly no larger company of Americans well known to their fellow men for their various achievements has been assembled to do honor to a foreign visitor. The dinner was the last of the functions arranged for the German Emperor's brother in this city previous to his tour of the country, and surely it was a princely sendoff for the Prince.

Brains and taste did their utmost in honor of the distinguished visitor from the Fatherland. The grand ballroom of the magnificent hotel, splendid as it ordinarily is, was transformed into a veritable dreamland of fragrance and floral beauty, the spacious corridors, the famed Astor Gallery and the East Room, with all their adjoining anterooms, were thrown into the huge suite of entertainment, and all were howered in roses and palms, while thousands of electric lamps, shaded by pink silk, shed a gentle radiance over all. Though all the guests were men, the two spacious galleries were filled by the women friends and relatives of the diners to the number of several hundred, and their lavishly elaborate gowns did much to enhance the richness of a picture already made brilliant by the beauty of the decorations and the many gorgeous uniforms of the soldiers, sailors and diplomats present. At one end of the ballroom, in the upper gallery, an orchestra of twenty pieces, led by Naham Franke, played while the various courses were being served. Their programme included many typically American airs, for the royal guest had expressed a wish to hear them. He listened with marked attention when the band tuned up to the strains of "Way Down Upon the Suwanee River" and "Dixie" and "Yankee Doodle," and rose to his feet among the first when "The Star Spangled Banner" was played.

A VISION OF FAIRYLAND.

The grand ballroom was transformed into a vision of fairyland. The decorators had been at work for days with their plans, and when the guests filed into their places a chorus of delight went up at the entrancing sight that met their gaze. Behind the fets at which the Prince and the principal guests were to sit were draped American and German flags so huge that they covered more than half the side of the ballroom. Above them was the Prussian eagle done in white, yellow, red and blue electric light bulbs simply embowered in masses of huge lilies and smilax. Down each of the huge pillars trailed luxuriant masses of smilax, which was also used profusely on both rows of boxes. Over the rail of each of the boxes in the lower tier large ferns ran a riot of green, while against their background deep red roses bloomed richly forth.

The Prince's table was simply banked with American Beauty roses, while more roses protruded in profusion from half a dozen beautiful cut glass vases placed at appropriate intervals. The front of the table below the roses was draped with smilax.

The nine long tables running the length of the ballroom gloved with La France roses, amid which a sinuous trail of smilax wound. Upon each plate lay a white rose. Above all this dream of green and pink and rose red smiled the work of one of America's foremost mural painters. But the decorations did not stop here.

The lower hall to the ballroom was massed with green and gold palms, and the Astor Gallery, into which twenty-eight tables of guests overflowed, was decked in keeping with the more gorgeous scene in the larger hall. It is safe to say that no more elaborate or beautiful decorations were ever seen at a semi-public dinner in this country.

RISE TO WELCOME THE ROYAL GUEST.

Owing to the attendance of the Prince at the torchlight procession and concert and reception of the German singing societies, it was late before the dinner began. All the guests had arrived by 8 o'clock and filed into the ballroom and took their seats. It was not expected that Prince Henry would get to the hotel much before 9 o'clock, though 8:30 was the hour mentioned for the beginning of the dinner. It was therefore a considerable surprise, when promptly upon the table, the guests who were to sit at the table on the fets filed into their places. They were greeted with applause, which swelled into greater volume as the band began to play "America." A moment later Prince Henry appeared at the main door, escorted by Herman Ridder, the toastmaster of the evening, and Edward Uhl. Everybody in the ballroom rose to his feet and applauded as the guest of the evening bowed his way down through the living lane that opened to let him pass. Meantime the band finished the tune, and not a soul sat down until it had ended. Then Mr. Ridder rapped for silence, and when it had been secured called upon Bishop Potter, who said grace, whereupon the dinner got under way.

PRINCE VIEWS PARADE.

TORCHES GLEAM AND CHEERS OF THOUSANDS GREET HIM.

SIX THOUSAND GERMAN-AMERICANS PASS BEFORE HIM AS HE STANDS IN ARION CLUBHOUSE BALCONY.

With ringing cheers and enthusiastic "hochs" six thousand loyal Germans passed in grand review before Prince Henry last night. As the long line, with its thousands of flaming torches, came down the avenue and saluted at the reviewing stand on the Arion Clubhouse the scene was one of great beauty. The clubhouse was superbly illuminated. Long festoons of electric lights were draped over the front, and the windows and ledges were outlined by lines of lights. On the third floor the balcony had been arranged as a reviewing stand. A royal purple canopy, fringed with gold lace, had been hung over it to protect the Prince. Above this flamed in their respective colors, the arms of the United States and the German Empire. Along the windows on the second story the American and German arms were shown in bunting, draped with intertwining national colors. High above the clubhouse at the central flagstaff floated the German naval flag, white to the right on another staff was the American flag.

Long before dark eager sightseers began to crowd the lower end of Park-ave. near Fifty-ninth-st. By 6 o'clock the avenue for blocks was a sea of upturned faces. Swaying back and forth, alternately crushed back against the walls of the buildings by the police and driven into the street by their own mass, they waited patiently for Prince Henry's coming.

At 6:30 a platoon of mounted police broke through the crowd and formed opposite the Park-ave. entrance to the Arion Hall. A moment later the cavalry followed. Swinging into company front, their bugler sounded a flourish, their swords flashed up to a salute, and the carriage containing Prince Henry stopped at the door. The Prince alighted quickly and passed into the clubhouse. A few minutes later he appeared on the balcony. The moment the crowd caught sight of him it burst into a loud and sustained cheer. Thousands of hats were waved in the air, and men, women and children joined in the ovation. Standing erect, the personification of military dignity, the Prince slowly raised his hand and saluted. He was joined on the balcony by his suite and Rear Admiral Evans, who stood in front with him.

The party had hardly taken their places on the balcony when the notes of "Die Wacht am Rhein" were heard in the distance, and the flashing of the torches of the paraders, who had formed at Seventy-second-st., and marched down the avenue, were descried. As the first division, headed by the grand marshal, Richard Muller, and his staff on horseback, arrived at the reviewing stand, there was a wild burst of cheering. Those in the procession uncovered, the flags at the head of the line were dipped and the torches were waved in a circle high above their bearers' heads. The light from the torches illuminated the balcony on which the Prince stood, and his salute was plainly visible to all.

For over an hour the thousands of paraders continued defiling before the reviewing stand. Red lights and a searchlight from a building next to the Arion Club, made the night as bright as day. The enthusiasm of the marchers did not abate in the least. Now and again a train passing in the tunnel would send up a cloud of steam, entirely hiding the Prince.

But, despite the dampness and the sharp wind, that caused him to draw his military cape closely about him, the Prince did not leave the stand until the last parade had passed. Just at the end of the procession came a group of Columbia students. As they reached the reviewing stand they halted, faced about, and several of their number stepping in front and waving the white and blue flags they carried, led a spirited cheer. "O-L-U-M-B-I-A, rah-rah, rah, Prince Henry!" was the repeated cheer. This seemed to puzzle the Prince, who turned to Admiral Evans for an explanation. Then he smiled and saluted the college boys.

As soon as the last division had passed the Prince entered the clubhouse. His disappearance was not a signal for the breaking up of the crowd. Without the slightest diminution of numbers they waited until the reception was over and the Prince had entered his carriage. As it started to move the man who was working the searchlight turned it on the carriage and gave the crowd an excellent view of the Prince. At the same moment the people gave a mighty cheer, and, holding his hand to his cap in recognition, the Prince was quickly driven out of view.
