MR. BRODRICK'S VIEWS AS TO VALUE OF ARMY AND NAVY.

METHODS OF PARLIAMENT AND REICHSTAG-THE ROYAL VISITORS-BISHOP'S PROTEST AGAINST DEAN FREMANTLE'S VIEWS.

This was an amusing generalization from the Secretary of War after the evidence supplied in South Africa that neither the Aldershot tactics nor the British military system were entirely trustworthy, not to say exact.

The rough judgment of many in the street would be that a thoroughgoing reform of the military administration would be worth the risks to which Lord Kitchener would be exposed in carrying out stringent measures against official incompetence, red tape and social influence.

While Parliamentary practice at Westminster has been reduced under closure on the remaining clauses of the Education bill to prolonged physical exercise in an incessant tramp, tramp, tramp through the division lobbies, the obstruction tactics of the Social Democrats and Radicals in the Reichstag have involved a change of procedure by which the whole series of amendments to the rules is passed over by a single vote.

The uncertainty respecting the tariff and treaties retards the revival of domestic trade in Germany. Low dividends are expected from even the best industrial companies, and electrical enterprises are suffering from inertia and general depression.

The visit of the German Emperor to Sandringham is brought to a close to-day, and he has gone northward to Louther Castle and will probably be entertained by Lord Rosebery and the Duke of Buccleuch before embarking on his yacht for Germany.

The entertainment of royalty, even with the round of shooting, banquets and theatricals, is less picturesque than the hospitality at Birmingham, where Mr. Chamberlain will enjoy on Monday night, Mr. Chamberlain's face and figure send themselves to caricature, and F. C. Gould's occupation would cease if he were prohibited from making cartoons about him, but poor in spirit must be the Englishman who begrudges the greatest citizen of the empire the send off which he receives from his own town and people.

The Bishop of London was ambiguous in dealing with the Education bill at the mass meeting of churchmen at Albert Hall, and created

Being of a roving disposition and anxious to see the world, Tyson left home when a young man, and, after wandering all over the United States and Europe in search of a fortune, finally landed in Australia.

Advertisements in papers all over the world brought to light thousands of supposed heirs, but the first would be to see that my children, six in number, have a large amount of it. Then I would endeavor to see that the debt of every church from Brooklyn to Montauk was paid off.

LINE WINS FOR YALE.

PRINCETON BEATEN BY A SCORE OF 12 TO 5.

DE WITT'S PHENOMENAL GOAL FROM THE FIELD-CHADWICK MAKES ELFS TWO TOUCHDOWNS.

(BY TELEGRAPH TO THE TRIBUNE.) Princeton, N. J., Nov. 15.-After a game in which Princeton scored first blood, and the issue of which was not decided until the referee's whistle had blown for the last time, Yale's football heroes trotted off the field here this afternoon victorious over the Tigers by a score of 12 to 5.

The game was witnessed by twenty thousand spectators, the great majority of whom were partisans of the most enthusiastic and demonstrative sort, and who came to cheer for Yale or for Princeton, win or lose, and certainly, if the game proper was hard fought, the cheering contest was one of the most inspiring ever heard.

Early in the morning the ferment began at Princeton that always marks the day of the Yale game. A good many Princeton alumni made a point of getting back to college the night before the Yale game, and last night was by no means an exception, so that Princeton Inn was the scene of merrymakings and football gossip and prognostication until an early hour this morning.

At the field the multitude was late in arriving. As every seat was reserved, there was no reason for hurry, and it was therefore not until 1:30 o'clock that the real rush began.

As the tide rose again in the afternoon the ship lifted with it, and a few minutes after 4 o'clock she swung around. She was not free, however, until 5 o'clock, when she got loose by her own efforts.
