THE NEWS OF BROOKLYN.

AN HISTORIC CLOCK IN THE NAVY YARD—THE CIVITAS CLUB'S GAVEL.

A Military and a Naval Wedding—Other Notes of Social Interest.

GOSSIP OF THE BOROUGH BROOKLYN SOCIAL WORLD

In the commandant's office in the navy yard an interesting old clock, which, although fifty-four years old, is not only in good running order, but practically furnishes the official time for the yard. This timepiece, which occupies a prominent position in the outer office of Rear Admiral Barker's suite, has a dial of about the same size as seen in the clocks of to-day that keep official time, but it is operated by a spring instead of weights. Its mahogany case is handsomely carved, and its brass hands shine in a way that shows the careful care it receives. The following inscription, revealing the age of the clock, appears on the case:

Presented to the U. S. Frigate Brandywine by the Crew—1849.

Lieutenant Eberle, aid to the commandant, said that he was not familiar with the history of the clock, but the inscription spoke for itself, and that the relic probably crafted to the yard as had many other of equal interest. It has been in use in the office for many years. At noon every day it is set by the official time received from the Naval Observatory in Washington. Some of the other clocks in the yard receive their corrections direct from Washington, but most of them depend on the ancient and reliable timepiece that has come down from the day of the frigate Brandywine.

Prior to the establishment of the Naval Museum at Annapolis about six years ago there were several hundred relics of the early navy at the Brooklyn yard. They were kept in the building known as the Naval Lyceum, which still retains its name and is used as headquarters for the commandant and the captain of the yard. Outside of the commandant's office, and at other points in the yard, are various pieces of historical ordnance which date from times long before the Civil War up to the present time, including several guns captured from Spain in the recent war with that nation. In the Naval Hospital is a curious old death mask of a full bearded man, who died there in the early half of the last century. Becoming friendly with an American naval officer, whose vessel visited his island, the man obtained an invitation to make a tour on the ship. The warship was suddenly ordered home, and the chief was brought to Brooklyn in the vessel. He gazed about for a few months later from consumption. His body lies in the Naval Cemetery. Persons interested in historical relics could spend most profitable days in exploring in and around the navy yard.

Members of the Atlantic Yacht Club, whose house is at Sea Gate, on Norton's Point, will be glad to hear that there is every prospect that Neptune-ave. will be improved from the Boulevard to Sea Gate. This will afford a proper approach to Sea Gate, where the summer homes of many well known men are, as well as the handsome quarters of the Atlantic Yacht Club. Although a sewer has been laid out for a good part of its length, except the last few feet, the water has washed away near Sea Gate a good slice of the land along which the sewer runs, according to the plans of the city. Sea Gate now it is necessary to reverse Surf-ave, which, from the fact that it is the main thoroughfare to Coney Island, is not a particularly pleasant route.

John R. Planten, Consul General of the Netherlands, recently presented to the Civitas Club a gavel of historical interest. The gavel fashioned of oak taken from the threshold of the Reformed Dutch Church of Delftshaven, Holland, in which the Pilgrim Fathers held their last service before sailing for the New World. The church was built in 1585, and when it was being repaired Mr. Planten obtained the piece of the original woodwork from which the gavel was made. The gavel bears a silver plate, with an appropriate inscription relating to the presentation, and when it is not in use is kept in a case of oak, and is silver lined, and decorated with the American and Holland colors.

THE ALBANY TO GET SILVER SERVICE.

The United States cruiser Albany is expected to reach the Brooklyn Navy Yard from Boston to-day or to-morrow. She comes here to receive a silver service from the citizens of Albany. According to present plans the presentation will take place on Saturday.

The Albany was one of the two cruisers that were being completed in English shipyards for Brazil when the Spanish war broke out. They were purchased by the government and placed in commission at once. The Albany has never been at the Brooklyn yard before.

DENIES TEACHER'S APPLICATION.

Justice Gaynor, in the Brooklyn Supreme Court, yesterday denied the application of Jeannette Baum and the Brooklyn Teachers' Association for a writ of mandamus to compel City Superintendent Maxwell to make promotions from the list of those teachers eligible because they hold "Grade A" certificates, without regard to a recent by-law requiring special examinations. This decision affects several thousand teachers. In his decision Justice Gaynor says, in part:

The Board of Education has passed a by-law providing for an examination of all on the eligible list who present themselves for such examination, in order to ascertain who are the most competent, and that way to make up from the eligible list of teachers an eligible list for promotion. The complaint of the petitioners is founded on the claim that this by-law is ultra vires under the charter, and is a nullity. It is a valid by-law. The Board of Education is free to establish a system of selection according to merit and fitness from the many eligible to promotion, instead of making promotions on no system, as the petitioners claim, they should do.
