

TRADE AND FINANCE ABROAD.

The German merchants will find in their trade with the Argentine Republic compensation for the mercantile advantages which they are sure to lose in Venezuela through the aggressive policy of their Government.

It is a special commercial training that they are trying to obtain in France, at least for service in the colonies, by the institution of what they call "Primary Colonial Schools."

Such a knowledge of colonial and other foreign commercial questions is needed, especially by those who write about them in newspapers.

The official statistics of the Brazilian Government show that, as nearly as can be determined at present in such a vast country where reports from Mato Grosso and other faraway regions are slow to be received, the total value of the Brazilian importations for 1902 will amount to about $23,000,000, as compared with $21,000,000 for the preceding year.

Commercial relations between France and the United States have found one more advocate in "The American Register" of Paris and London, in which cities it is published simultaneously.
