LITERARY NOTES.

Another reprint, announced by the Fleming H. Revell Company, will consist of that part of Ralph Connor's "The Sky Pilot" which tells cowboys. The Rev. Charles Cuthbert Hall once said that these chapters of Mr. Connor's novel contain the answer to the eternal question of humanity, "Does God send trouble?" The reputation which the narrative of this one character has made apart from the rest of the story has led to its separate publication in a volume which will be entitled "Gwen." Each page will be decorated with marginal drawings and printed in two colors.

Scotchman's advice to his son, "Jock, when ye Dr. Henshall. hae naething else to do ye may be aye sticking in a tree; it will be growing, Jock, when ye're sleeping," the author has been moved rather by esthetic considerations in producing this dainty Nature and the timber producer have different aims and pursue different methods in the making of forests, though the latter is not above taking a hint from the former occasionally. The greater the success of the forester, the more profound is the stillness of the forester, the more profound is the stillness of the forester, and the more monotonous. In place of the natural forest, with its varied and teeming life, we have what Wordsworth called "a timber factory." With every desire that the natural resources of our country should be properly developed, we do hope that he [the forester] will not be entirely successful in its efforts, and that a few of the woods and wastes of Nature's own planting may be left for the recreation of the simple folk who have not yet taken to appraising the value of everything by the price it will fetch in the market.

A recent reprint in John Lane's series, "Flowers of Parnassus," is William Watson's "The Tomb of Burns." It is a critical elegy written in the six line stanza in which Burns himself wrote many of his epistles, and was included in the volume called "The Father of the Forest," which Mr. Watson issued in 1895. The reprint is illustrated with pen drawings of Dumfries' landmarks and Scotch scenes by D. Y. Cameron.

The Louisiana Purchase Exposition is now in better working order, and people are taking advantage of the favorable weather to visit it before the real St. Louis summer sets in. A useful little guide and "time saver" has been published by Laird & Lee, containing most of the information that sightseers want to know. It aims to help them to get to the exhibits in which they are most interested with the least effort. There are also data in regard to hotels and boarding houses, dates of various meetings to be held during the fair, and blank pages for expense accounts and other personal memo-

The Boston Authors' Club visited Whittier's home at Amesbury, Mass., last week in a body. The pilgrims were entertained by Samuel T. Pickard, the author of "Whittier Land." An interesting incident of the day was the presentation by Mr. Pickard to Mrs. Julia Ward Howe of a book which she had sent to Whittier fiftyone years ago, containing a number of comments and interlineations by the poet.

Margaret Horton Potter, the author of "The Flame Gatherers," is in private life Mrs. John D. Black, of Chicago. She is the daughter of Orrin W. Potter, of that city, was educated at Bryn Mawr, and was married on January 1, 1902. Her husband is a son of General J. C. Black. Although she is only twenty-three years old, she is the author of five published books.

Recently, while gathering material for one of his articles on the misgovernment of cities, Linconversation revealed many important political secrets. The next morning Mr. Steffens introduced himself to one of the men, told him of the purpose of his visit, and asked if he had any further information to impart. The politician was completely confounded and rushed to tell the story of the self-willed girl who was his friend of their exposure. Two very anxious crippled for life in saving one of her father's individuals awaited the publication of Mr. Steffens's article, and no doubt heaved great sighs of relief when they discovered that he had used none of the information thus given him. Confidences are not news.

"Inch for inch, and pound for pound, the gamest fish that swims," is truthfully stamped in golden letters on the cover of Dr. James A. Colonel Himes has made extensive researches into the literature of many lands and arrives at the conclusion that, as saltpetre was not at the conclusion that, as saltpetre was not for Executor, 54 Wall Street, New York City. known before the thirteenth century, and the invention of gunpowder was necessarily dependent on its use, gunpowder could not have been earlier discovered. He discards the theory that saltpetre was secretly known and used by the early Greeks and definitely ascribes the invention to Roger Bacon, about 1248, although to do this he has to solve the cryptogrammatic chapters IX, X and XI of the Friar's "De Secretis," written in 1249. His method is ingenious, but simple. The volume is published by Longmans, Green & Co.

Hannis Taylor, professor of constitutional and international law at Columbian University, who was Minister to Spain from 1893 to 1897, sailed in the Majestic last Tuesday for England. On June 30 the degree of LL. D. will be conferred upon him by Dublin University. The University of Edinburgh will pay him a similar honor on July 23. These distinctions come to Mr. Taylor in recognition of the merit of his two books, "The Origin and Growth of the English Constitution" and "International Public Law."

Encouragement by rejection is not often the lot of the literary aspirant, who usually finds little cheer in the return of a manuscript. It all depends on how the rejection is worded. Few authors find editors so frank as Sam Walter Foss, of whom it is related that in returning a contribution sent to "The Yankee Blade" by John H. Whitson, whose "The Rainbow Chasers" was recently reviewed in this journal, he made the laconic comment. "Too good for us" on the back of the manuscript, and added, "Try elsewhere." The trial was successful, and the editorial advice was the beginning of a strong friendship between the two men. Mr. Whitson has now come East, and lives in Somerville, Mass., near the public library of which Mr. Foss is in charge.

The enthusiasm and self-sacrifice of missionaries would be of little avail unless there were enthusiasm and organization at home. "We saw there was a gold mine in India," said Andrew his articles on the misgovernment of cities, Lincoln Steffens chanced to be in the smoking compartment of a train on his way to the particular city then under consideration, with two strangers. These men began to talk of inside political matters in that city, and in the course of their matters in that city, and in the course of their matters in that city, and in the course of their matters in that city and in the course of their matters in that city and in the course of their matters in that city and in the course of their matters in that city and in the course of their matters in that city and in the course of their matters in that city, and in the course of their matters in that city and in the course of their matters in that city and in the course of their matters in that city and in the course of their matters in that city and in the course of their matters in that city and in the course of their matters in that city and in the course of their matters in that city and in the course of their matters in the course of the centre of the earth. has suggested the title, "Holding the Ropes" (Funk & Wagnalls Company), of Belle M. Brain's practical handbook of missionary methods for workers at home. System and organization are the keynotes of Miss Brain's scheme for holding the ropes. The use of the Bible, the value of prayer, the choice of music, methods of interesting individuals, the conduct of meetings, the raising of money and the filling of missionary boxes are treated with a sane and practical understanding. She has even invented a game, "Who's Who in Missions," for interesting children in the Sunday school and home circle. Rope holders who study Miss Brain's suggestions will not find themselves in the plight of a woman of whom the author writes, who came running to the secretary of a Young Women's Christian Association one afternoon, exclaiming, "We are in great trouble. Mrs. W. is absent, and no one else will pray! We can't begin the missionary meeting. Won't you come over and pray for us?" The secretary went at once. "I felt," she said, "that they needed praying for in more senses than one."
