CHAMPIONSHIP CRICKET.

Brooklyn Outbats Manhattan at Prospect Park.

The Manhattan and Brooklyn Cricket clubs had their first meeting of the season in the league championship series of games yesterday at Prospect Park. The contest proved close enough to be interesting all through, for although Manhattan was eventually defeated by 29 runs, the last few men did not give up hope, and made a great effort to stay off the field.

J. Power did the best batting of the game, with a free innings of 49, while C. Smith obtained the bowling honors with a record of 5 wickets for 24 runs.

Columbia Oval had Team B, of Brooklyn, as opponents at Williamsbridge, and won easily by 181 runs. This result was brought about chiefly through the effective bowling of R. Kortlang, who captured seven wickets for 12 runs, and good work at the bat by nearly all the team, with A. Hoekings showing up well with an innings of 52.

BROOMSTICK'S BRIGHTON.

World's Record Time. Runs 1-1-4 Miles in 2:02 4-5—Irish Lad Breaks Down.

The climax of the most brilliant sequence of races the American turf has known came yesterday when Captain Sam S. Brown's three-year-old colt Broomstick, by Irish Lad—Irish, carrying 94 pounds, and ridden by "Tommy" Burns, won the Brighton Beach Handicap in one and a quarter, in the almost incredible time of 2:02 4-5. Not only did Broomstick beat the world's record for the distance by two-fifths of a second, but he beat Waterbury, the supposedly invincible horse, which beat the world's record a year ago in this same handicap and hung up figures which it was predicted, would not be changed in many a year.

Not only was the Brighton of yesterday the richest of the great handicaps which have been run in the East this year, but it brought out the most superb field which has ever faced a starter, either in the East or the West, and resulted in a magnificent fought contest which racing men of the present generation have seen or are likely to see. Captain Brown's colt was played by some one other than his owner so heavily that, despite the tremendous volume of money which went in on Waterbury, Irish Lad and Ort Wells, his price dropped from 5 to 1 in the opening quotations to 6 to 1 and in many books 5 to 1 at post time.

The company which Broomstick defeated was made up, it might almost be said, of the survivors of the Brooklyn and the Suburban handicaps. Of the horses whose achievements have made them great among their contemporaries, Hermal, winner of the Suburban and The Picket, winner of the Brooklyn Handicap, were the only two which were present.

Hermal had bruised a leg in the Test Handicap last Wednesday, and although the accident was not considered serious, Mr. Thomas did not care to take a chance with his little red horse in a race which he knew would be an entirely recovered from a sore which developed in the colt's last work on Wednesday.

The withdrawal of these four left seven horses in the field, but had they all been withdrawn, with the exception of Waterbury, Irish Lad and Ort Wells, it is altogether probable that the attendance would have been quite as great.

The first race was a selling race, and the public was not slow to take advantage of the opportunity to challenge the public who had braved a journey across the parched places of Arizona to see him.

It was the first time Waterbury had sported silk and a saddle since he was developed a bad leg after winning the Century Stakes last September, and knowing, as it did, that he had been carefully pointed for this particular race, that he was there to defend his title against all who had the temerity to challenge, the public would have braved a journey across the parched places of Arizona to see him.

It was a pilgrimage might be fraught in the dry season with more actual peril than that which the overhead and the underneath transportation companies arranged for their patrons to Brighton Beach yesterday, but it could not have brought about a series of more cunningly devised schemes for annoyance, discomfort and delay. Hops trails and rattling trolleys were all originating this morning and ward was across the flats of Long Island and long a sun lid gone down on the wrath of ten thousand men and as many women and children.

The small but select group of beach combers which has always looked upon the little track by the sea as its own particular stamping ground was augmented almost beyond the capacity of the enclosure, not only by the holiday crowd, but by those who find Newport and the Berkshires preferable in July to Brighton Beach. At two o'clock of them came because James B. Haggin was starting his great black horse Waterbury. That was the only reason which induced the venerable horseman himself to make the trip to the track by the sea.

It mattered not that the black horse, with 129 pounds on his back, was driven from two pounds to Irish Lad to fourth place to Eugenia Burch, that he was to be ridden by Lyne, a boy who is held in less esteem than other so-called fashionable jockeys; that the horse was making his first box in a big race in almost a year, and that he was meeting the most formidable group of great horses that could be brought together in this or any other period of the season. The public wanted to see Waterbury at any price. And it got him at 2 to 1.

So insistent was the demand that, although the astute makers of prices did not believe Waterbury infallible, they "rubbed" from 5 to 2 to 2 to 1 because they saw that they could take to one the money they were sure to get at that price. Mr. Thomas's three-year-old colt Ort Wells, because of his victory over Irish Lad in the Commonwealth, was the next best liked horse in the field and was liberally played at 11 to 5. With 108 pounds he was giving Broomstick four pounds, but from Highball, the only other three-year-old in the race, he was in receipt of seven pounds.

All Friday night and yesterday morning the harness was draped over the track, and with the sun shining brightly, the spectators were thoroughly dried out, but in lightning fast condition when the bugle for the handicap sounded.

A St. Louis Presidential possibility, with weeks of preparation, could not have created a more spontaneous outburst of applause than did Waterbury as he walked at the head of the procession toward the starting post, staggered home, beaten and broken, but greater in defeat than any other horse has ever been in victory. Irish Lad held the thousands in a spell that neither Waterbury then nor the winner later could break. Never had his marvelous speed seemed so restless; his will so impetuous as to sweep through the narrow lane on his way to a splendid defeat.

Waterbury left in rear. Broomstick, Highball and Ort Wells fell in behind him, Waterbury's wonderful stride and tremendous strength seemed impotent in the face of the great speed of the lower turn through the backstretch and to the quarter pole he carried them at a speed never attained in any race before.

At the head of the stretch Hildebrand thought he would win as he pleased, but Broomstick was nearer than he thought, and was holding on with a tenacity that seemed almost impudent. Hildebrand had the moment on Irish Lad, and there was no waiting orders from the stable this time. Because of a rapidly developing rhinophis his young owner realized only too well that his great hearted horse might be making his last start, and he preferred that if he had to break down it should be in the strife and stress of a great struggle rather than in the quiet hours of a morning.

To the comparative few in the great gathering who understood this condition it was not difficult to fancy in the brown colt's proud bearing, in his fine scorn of all pain and weariness, that he was conveying in his own way the old splendid greeting, "Broomstick salutes you and from the moment the barrier was up until he staggered home, beaten and broken, but greater in defeat than any other horse has ever been in victory, Irish Lad held the thousands in a spell that neither Waterbury then nor the winner later could break. Never had his marvelous speed seemed so restless; his will so impetuous as to sweep through the narrow lane on his way to a splendid defeat."
