HOODLUM BARELY SAVED. Mob Threatens to Lynch Men Who Threw Girls in Water.

An infatuated mob of five hundred bathers, shrieking for the life of Samuel Brooks, of No. 229 5th-st., made his rescue by the police...

The young women who make the complaint said they are Carrie Bauer, of No. 67 West 160th-st.; Nella Hatten, of No. 261 West 123rd-st.; and Agnes McLaughlin, of the same address. All three are about eighteen years old.

The bathing beach was crowded in the early evening. On the beach and in the water were more than five hundred bathers and spectators. Among those swimming were Brooks and an unknown friend, both about twenty-five years old.

As these two men swam about in the river, about one hundred feet off shore, a rowboat containing the three young women came near. According to the women one of the men cried out to them:

"Hello, girls; won't you take us for a ride?" The girls ignored him, but both men, they say, swam out toward their boat.

"Go away," she screamed. Then, they say, both men swam out to her boat, and she fled into it, despite their protestations. Brooks, who took possession of the bow of the boat and the other man took up his position in the stern.

"Now, girls," the women asserted one of the men said, "we'll show you how to make the boat go."

Both men then stood up in the boat and began to rock it. The women, who were sitting in the stern, pleaded the women. "We can't swim, and you'll sink the boat."

"Then we'll teach you how," said Brooks's friend, according to the women. The men, who were seen from the beach, and there were many cries of anger and warning. The men paid no attention to them, and it is said they rocked the boat continuously.

Hardly had it started when the rowboat with the girls, men in it turned turtle. The women shrieked in fear and strain, and toward the men, they say, laughed mockingly at them and swam away.

The women were carried to the boat-house, where they were attended later by Dr. Parmelee. As soon as the boat was started, the men began to quarrel. The men paid no attention to them, and it is said they rocked the boat continuously.

WON'T OBEY SUBPOENA. EDITOR GIVES REASONS.

Sensation at Hooker Hearing—Justice's Wife on Stand.

[BY TELEGRAPH TO THE TRIBUNE.] Albany, June 17.—The legislative attempt to investigate the charges of "The Press," of New York, of bribery in connection with the Hooker case ended in an amusing tangle to-night, when John A. Hennessy, the managing editor, sent word denying the right of the legislature to subpoena him, and refusing to appear.

The debate that followed the sensation created by this defiance developed that Mr. Hennessy was correct in his position, and that the attempt to subpoena him had been illegal in its character. After two hours of debate the legislature finally decided to send another subpoena, and meanwhile to resume the Hooker case.

The resumption of the discussion of the charges of bribery took place directly after the session opened. Lewis E. Carr, attorney for Justice Hooker, arose and made a statement regarding the charge that the Delaware and Hudson Railroad had been using money and influence to secure the acquittal of Justice Hooker. Mr. Carr is attorney for the justice and also for the railroad corporation. He explained that he had entered the case without any suggestion from the railroad. He then suggested that it was the duty of the legislature, before it proceeded with the trial, to free itself from the burden of the charges against it contained in the testimony given by Ervin Wardman last week.

This proposition met with little favor, since it insured another week of delay, and there followed the reading of the list of men for whom subpoenas had been issued. The only other man who had been served was John A. Hennessy, and he replied with a flat denial of authority. The reading of his denial created a sensation. He declared in his answer that he refused to come because the reasons set forth in the subpoena were irrelevant to the business before the extra session, that the present session had no power to investigate the story published by "The Press," and that it was by the constitution prohibited from considering anything not called to its attention by the Governor.

Mr. Hennessy also protested on the ground "that the power of investigation is given only to each house in respect of matters upon which it is authorized to legislate, and the said joint session not having such power nor this extra ordinary session having any present authority to so legislate, it is without power to investigate."

Then followed an angry fusillade of legal opinions. Assemblyman Rogers, who is active in the attempt to vindicate the legislation named, moved for the issuance of writs for the body of Mr. Hennessy. Senator Grady insisted that this was futile, and that Mr. Hennessy had acted within his rights in refusing to obey the subpoena.

"You might as well have directed the sergeant at arms to send him a polite note to come to the lobby to-night," he said sarcastically. He declared that the mistake had been made in the form of a subpoena. He was opposed by Senator Page, who no sooner began to outline his belief in the legislature's rights and to suggest a way to get Mr. Hennessy to appear, than he rose and argued strenuously against this course.

To cap the climax, Assemblyman Moreland declared that the joint session had no authority to subpoena anyone, and that the legislature had no power to legislate. He declared that the legislature had no power to legislate, and that the legislature had no power to legislate.
