

PLANNING A RAG CARPET AT DEERFIELD, MASS.

A MILITARY FAMILY.

Four of Ten Persons Buried in One Plot Served the United States.

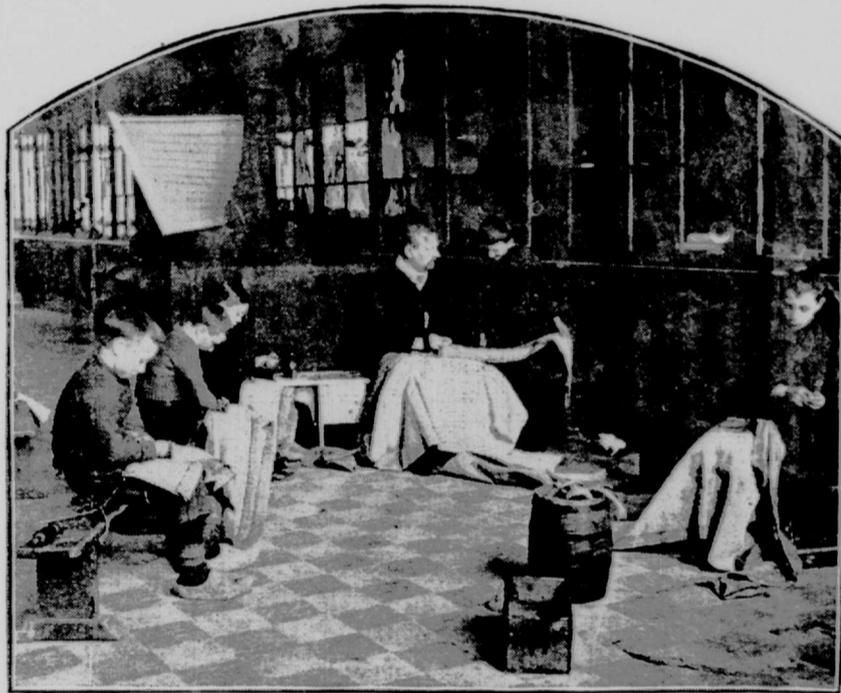

Of the ten persons buried in one of the family plots in Trinity Cemetery, at 153d street and Broadway, four were in their lifetime identified with the military or naval service of the United States, and three of them died as a result of this service.

The plot is that of the Very Rev. Dr. Jonathan Mayhew Wainwright, who was appointed to wear the mitre of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of New York in 1852 as the successor of Bishop Onderdonk, and his descendants.

Commander Wainwright was killed in an action with the Confederates near Galveston early on the morning of January 1, 1863, while in command of the gunboat Harriet Lane.

His son, the third to bear the name of Jonathan Mayhew, entered the Naval Academy about the time of his father's death. He died in 1870 when only twenty-one years old, from wounds received in an action with pirates near San Blas, Mexico.

Major Wainwright was a surgeon in the army.

A MONUMENT TO THE MEMORY OF A MILITARY FAMILY.

On one side of this stone, which marks the Wainwright plot in Trinity Cemetery, Washington Heights, are inscribed the names and records of three members of this family, who, as army and navy officers, died in the service of their country, and whose bodies, with that of the wife of an army officer, lie buried in this plot.

He died in 1863 at New Orleans of a fever caught there. Amelia, the daughter, was killed at Fort Wallace, Kansas, shortly after the beginning of the war, at the age of thirty-two years.

Another grandson of the bishop, also a descendant of the militant strain in the family, joined the 12th Regiment, N. G. N. Y., in the Mexican War, and went in command of a company but got no further than a camp in the State of Mexico. He resigned his commission as lieutenant in the command of the 12th Regiment in 1865.

While the descendants of Bishop Wainwright do not claim a close relationship with Captain Richard Wainwright, U. S. N., commander of the Gloucester in the Spanish-American War, and afterward superintendent of the Naval Academy at Annapolis, with the distinction of being the officer of lowest rank to hold that place, yet the coat of arms and other insignia of the two families are the same, and they are considered to have a common ancestor.

seams containing the choicest and rarest of fish, shells, birds and instruments of description, sea charts and maps, models representing every type of vessel, masts and rigging, and, in fact, everything pertaining to the ship's craft are placed at the young students' disposal.

The course of study at the school lasts three years, during which time the many secrets of the fishing trade are revealed to the young Flemings. A peep into some of the school reveals the methods of instruction. Here one sees a large net spread out on the ground, a number of boys seated on it engaged in repairs, while another group of youngsters is learning an accurate knowledge of the sea and others still are being initiated into the mysteries of rope splicing.

room and an anteroom, and the Smith girls often use it for a little private parlour. It is maintained by the sale of souvenirs, cards and such things. During the exhibition the walls were hung with hand woven rugs of exquisitely beautiful colors.

Deerfield and its work resemble one family, for there is some task for every one. The young women work the blue and white designs drawn by Miss Whiting and Miss M. The village blacksmith plays his part by his superior forge work and turning out of andirons. The village physician displays a boy and a carved bride chest as his contribution to the work of this big family.
