

POWERS OF EXECUTIVES

DR. WILSON LECTURES

Tells What the Present Duties of President Are.

The President of the United States was the subject which Woodrow Wilson, president of Princeton University, dealt with yesterday in his lecture delivered at Columbia. The lecturer, in his lecture as pointed out that they have been transferred from Webster to Earl Hall, but yesterday even that room was crowded to its capacity.

Dr. Wilson emphasized the fact that the power of the President of the United States is constantly growing, and that the Presidency has come to be something entirely different from what it was intended to be by the makers of the Constitution.

Dr. Wilson said that, with the immense business of government, it is entirely impossible for a President to be an executive officer, as a President, in the course of his life knows two or three Presidents, and in talking with them the most interesting thing he has found out is how little they know about affairs in Washington.

The speaker termed the messages of Presidents "only interesting essays," depending for their force entirely on the character of the man behind them.

Dr. Wilson said that a party convention ran in selecting a leader, and that the President, Dr. Wilson said: "I have a firm belief in Providence, and therefore I see no accident in the fact that Lincoln was nominated by a Chicago convention.

It is hard to give a clear description of the influence of a single party, like the office of President, cannot be shown except in its relations to the Executive and the Judiciary.

Dr. Wilson said that the President is not a ruler, but a leader, and that the President is not a ruler, but a leader, and that the President is not a ruler, but a leader.
