

MONEY FLOWS TO FUND. OLD ADVENTURER DEAD. HOENIG BOY KILLED.

Everything was fair yesterday except the weather at the Metropolitan Opera House when President Roosevelt, in Washington, touched a little gold button and set the chimes ringing the start of the biggest benefit ever planned for the Actors' Fund in a town noted for such facts. Everybody who is anybody in the theatrical profession and who was in New York and could get away was there, to give the show a proper send-off.

There was only one absentee, and that was Mrs. Sydney Rosenfeld. Needless to say, Mark Twain was there, and so were his books, in the Century Theatre Club booth. Despite the late unpleasantness, Mark showed no hard feelings, and won the heartiest kind of applause when he said, in speaking of the objects of the fair, that charity was a religion, broad enough for all to stand on. But the fair gained real headway when President Daniel Frohman read a telegram of welcome from John Drew, president of the Players, in which he wired a subscription of $200 to the fund.

The weather was not wet enough to dampen the ardor of the actresses, who wore their most gorgeous Clyde Fitch costumes in a Shakespearean setting and exhibited a persistency and energy in battling their way through the crowd that was never surpassed by the market women of Stratford in the bard's lifetime or since.

Fashionable society sent a prominent delegation of its leading members to help along the good cause, and if anybody left the house with carfare home it was not because of the laxity of all the collectors.

President Daniel Frohman said last night that even with the handicap of bad weather, the receipts for the first day had surpassed his expectations. The $1,500 alone being realized on the sale of the first two tickets of admission, which went to Marc Conner, A. Erlinger and others.

One of the most popular features and one of the best money winners of the day was the racing wheel, which is in charge of Catherine Counts, with a dozen or more assistants. Almost $200 had been won in when the fair closed yesterday afternoon, and they had not got through counting the money until midnight.

The Thaw, Harry K. and Evelyn Nesbit, sent a check for $100 through the Professional Woman's League.

Another of the booths which raked in the money that night was the Twelfth Night Club, in the Anne Hathaway cott. The book, which is a dozen or more assistants. Almost $200 had been won in when the fair closed yesterday afternoon, and they had not got through counting the money until midnight.

STAR FEATURE MISSING. Hammerstein's Understudy Fails to Make Good at Victoria Hearing.

In a few days the waiting word will know what constitutes a sacred concert when it is given in a variety theatre. The hearing of the complaints of one who failed to see the sacredness of a performance, although it was not even a white act, ended yesterday before Justice Lawrence, the referee in the case against the Victoria Theatre, and to-morrow the final briefs will be submitted by counsel.

The hearing yesterday took up little time, Louis J. Vorhaus, counsel for the Hammersteins, resting his case after examining two witnesses. First came Morris Gest, the manager. As a stage manager he may be equal to the elder Hammerstein, but his performance on the witness stand was distinctly below that of the impresario describing his "slumming" trip to the Victoria. Mr. Gest, as soon as he was settled in the witness chair, admitted shamelessly that he was a theatrical manager.

"If you don't see," commented the referee, "why do you not talk up a witness who is not a witness? ever take any elocution lessons?"

Mr. Gest said he hadn't, but guessed he could speak up even if he hadn't. He said there was little he did not know about what made a dancing, juggling, circus or acrobatic act, and on this knowledge was able to say that there had not been anything of the kind in the Victoria since the time which the complaints are made. "It was a very tame performance," he said, decidedly.

"Was it the same kind of performance which has been permitted on Sundays for the last few years?"

"It was," said Gest, after a few objections had been heard.

On cross-examination Gest could not remember the details of the costumes worn by the performers in the Victoria, but he was sure that the street without blocking traffic.

The case will be entirely in the hands of the referee, who will have to decide whether or not the brief and our argument, shortly to be presented, will be sufficient to justify the referee's decision. Mr. Gest said he was gathering up his papers after adjournment.

ROMANCE IN COURT. End of Three-Year Fight by Thirty-eight Heirs.

More or less romance is hidden in the decision just handed down by Justice Garrison in the Supreme Court, in which he blocks the attempt of a woman to get possession of the estate of her uncle and aunt, in whose home she was reared, although never legally adopted by them. Unless the decision is upset by the higher courts or some other action is brought the estate, which now amounts to about $60,000, will be divided among thirty-eight legal heirs of John Schutte, the largest share, one-seventh, will go to Heinrich Heitshausen, a German, who was the only child of both the Anna S. Schutte, a music teacher, of this city, and Behrend Nordbruch, of Germany.

The fight was won after three years of litigation by George W. Carr, Theall & Bean and George H. Kracht, representing the heirs, while Dalley & Williams represented Margarete von der Heide in her claim to prove her right to the money. In the early fifties John Schutte married Albertina, who had nursed him through an attack of smallpox in a sailors' boarding house. In 1871 they brought back from a trip to Germany Margaret, the two-year-old niece of Mrs. Schutte. The girl was reared as their own child, but broke with her mother by marrying against their wishes. Albertina Schutte died in 1884, and later Schutte married Lena Schutte. Less than a month after Schutte's death, on April 30, 1894, Mrs. von der Heide brought an action to have all the estate left by him declared to be her property. She claimed that before she was taken from her parents in Germany the Schuttes had entered into a verbal contract with her to give her all their property. By frugality and good investment Schutte had acquired property in lower Liberty street and elsewhere valued at $100,000.

OLD ADVENTURER DEAD. Contents of Stomach May Lead to Arrest of Murderer.

With the death yesterday of Henry Ronald Douglis MacIver, one of the best of the old adventurers who helped to make history disappeared. Giving his sword to eighteen flags, he won distinction on a hundred battlefields, until the final fate of his adventures made those of a Richard Harding Davis hero fade into oblivion. After a life of the hardest campaigning and a score of duels, he died yesterday in his boarding house, No. 223 West 23d street. When the police were told of his death they confused him with Major General MacArthur, until finally they were set right by General Grant.

For years, off and on, General MacIver was one of the best known of the "old timers" who made their headquarters in the Hoffman House. When he was not to be found there he was generally off under some strange banner, acquiring new scars and honors in the most picturesque and daring way, stalwart and grizzled, and had an ugly sabre slash across his forehead, won in Mexico.

No American, even Walker, the filibuster, or Sam Ward, of Salem, who put down the Taoping rebellion, ever had a more adventurous career. Born off the coast of Virginia in 1841, of Scotch parentage, he first smelt powder in the Sepoy rebellion as an ensign. When Garibaldi was raising his Italian flag he enlisted under Don Carlos, the Spanish pretender, and then came back to this country to offer his sword to Lee when the Civil War broke out. From major in the Army of the Confederacy he became an officer under Maximilian and was ennobled on the field of battle for gallantry by that ill-fated monarch. He then went to Egypt, where as inspector of cavalry he aided the Khedive in reorganizing the Egyptian army. For a while he was chief in command of the cavalry of King Milan of Serbia, and then came to be in charge of the king's bodyguard. At Plevna, when the Turks were routed, he was there as an aid to General Skobelev. Until the Russo-Japanese War no campaign of consequence was without General MacIver somewhere in the thick of it. He served through the Russo-Japanese War in Cuba, in Brazil, in Argentina, in Crete and Greece against the Turks and in Bosnia.

Not long ago Richard Harding Davis described in his story on "Real Soldiers of Fortune," and was collaborating with him on a new edition of General MacIver's autobiography, "The Soldier of Fortune," the title of "Fighting Under Fourteen Flags." It was that time General MacIver had served under four monarchs.

General MacIver returned from Washington a few days ago, in good health, with the exception of a few aches. On Sunday he was about the house, recalling some of his old fights. In the morning he was found dead in his bed. His body was removed to the morgue, and the coroner's jury, which the funeral will be held. His only relative is a daughter, with whom he quarrelled some ago. He was about seventy years old.

FELIX REGAMEY. The death is announced from Nice of Félix Regamey, the painter.

Emile Félix Regamey was born in Paris on August 7, 1844. He was the son of a lithographer whose three sons all achieved eminence in the field of art. The oldest brother, Guillaume, the painter, died in 1876; the youngest, Frédéric, is well known as an illustrator and for his paintings of fences and fencing.

Félix Regamey studied at the Beaux Arts and under Leon, de Baulandier. He made his first start as a contributor of clever drawings to the "Journal Amusant," "La Vie Parisienne," "Paris Caprice" and other humorous illustrated papers. He made several trips to the United States, drawing pictures for American periodicals. He accompanied Emile Guimet, the well known French traveler and collector, on the latter's expedition to Japan, and the expedition was replete with numerous interesting studies from nature of the public and religious life of the East, which he exhibited in the ethnographical department of the museum of the Louvre in Paris.

He published, besides a report on "The Teaching of Art in the United States," various illustrated studies on the life and customs of the Orient, and many character studies and portraits of French celebrities.

HOENIG BOY KILLED. Contents of Stomach May Lead to Arrest of Murderer.

[By Telegraph to the Tribune.] Cleveland, May 6.—The positive declaration to-night of Coroner Burke and Drs. Sewell and Schultz that little Alice Hoening was killed, and the discovery of certain facts in regard to one of the suspected persons, will, it is believed, result in the arrest of the murderers in the morning.

The boy had noodles and milk for supper on the night he disappeared. An examination of the stomach showed the presence of noodles and milk and also red preserved meat, bread with anise seed and part of an apple. As it is unlawful for Hebrews to eat meat within six hours after partaking of milk no orthodox mother would permit her child to have meat.

Further, preserved meats cannot be bought near the Hoening home. It is known that a suspected person liked preserved meat so well that he was accustomed to buy it downtown and eat it with bread covered with anise seeds. He is said to have had ready means of getting apples without cost and access to a refrigerator and a shed containing sausages.

ITALIANS SEE TRAGEDY. Make No Move to Help Victim of Man Avenging an Insult.

Trying to avenge an insult to his mother, one Italian was killed by another last night while all the tenants of the 10th tenement house on West 10th street looked on without making a move to help the slain man. Pritzko married a pretty Italian girl, he and Rocco Michael were close friends. Michael is a fugitive, after killing his old friend. That Michael still continued to pay ardent devotion to the young woman after her marriage is believed to have been a motive for his murder, too, the insult to Pritzko's mother being only the climax to the bad feeling between the men.

Pritzko, his wife and mother lived on the upper story of the house. Michael lived on the same floor, and the men seldom met without exchanging angry words. Michael met the mother on the stairs last night, and, according to Pritzko, grossly insulted her. Pritzko heard him and lost no time in resenting it.

Forcing Pritzko over the banister until the man's back threatened to break, Michael drew a revolver, and, forcing his mouth open with the muzzle of the revolver and fired. Driving the others before him like whipped dogs, Michael ran upstairs to the roof. He was followed by a crowd of onlookers, and appeared before anybody summoned enough courage to follow him.

The conference, which will last three days, was held at the Union Stock Yards. The approximate cost of the inspection, as provided for by the law, is $38 certificates of exemption. Inspection has been withdrawn, Dr. Melvin declared, from forty-six official establishments, principally because of failure to maintain a proper standard of sanitation, and in some cases because of the use of prohibited preservatives.
