

THE REAL ESTATE OUTLOOK. BRISK BRONX TRADING LIKELY TO BE A FEATURE OF THE YEAR. A Large Number of Small Houses May Be Built in Upper Sections— Construction Work in the Business Districts.

Most persons connected with the real estate market are trying to learn what the big operators, speculators and investors have planned to do or expect to do this year. Will one or all of them be prominent in the midtown and uptown districts? If really signs are true harbingers of what the future holds in reserve, few large building projects in the district south of Chambers st., in the midtown and in the central 5th ave. districts will be begun this year. Conditions which affect the market are not favorable to carrying out such projects on a basis as secure and as satisfactory as that on which many gigantic plans were projected in 1906 and 1907. Nor are those conditions so shaped that there is likely to be in any month of the year in any business section of the city a large number of persons buying sites with the purpose of improving them immediately. An unusually big improving movement and as a result business districts might result if a hundred or more owners of property there suddenly offered their holdings at a much less sum than at present asked. But such a thing is as likely to happen as the building of a bridge across the Hudson River this year. Why should any owner of an improved parcel in the business districts seek a market for his property at a sacrifice, which means nothing more or less than selling at much below the present value? The business districts have been and are the strongest investment fields. The sums invested there do not net as large a yearly return as in many other sections, but the earning power of the money so invested is about the same in dull ready days as it is in times devoid of financial surpluses. For this earning power, with little wavering tendencies, praise is due largely to the real leaders of many years ago. They did not burden the districts with buildings for which they had little use and which would undoubtedly have been poor paying ventures. They were good judges of what the sections wanted and they built accordingly. If they had one great fault or weakness, it was the fear of building more structures than required, and thus always keeping a little ahead of the demand in this respect. Heading the demands from many business quarters, many of the really leaders selected in 1906 and 1907 a large area of the districts to transform into modern office and loft centres. These operations represented not only an investment of many millions, but added in BROOKLYN SUBWAY TRAIN SCHEDULE. Service Under East River Will Probably Begin on Thursday. No announcement has been made to the Public Service Commission as to what day this week the Interborough Rapid Transit Company will begin the operation of trains through the East River tunnel to the Brooklyn Borough Hall. Unofficially it was said at the Interborough offices yesterday that the service would probably begin on Thursday, unless unforeseen obstacles are encountered. Some eighteen hundred employees of the Interborough, including motormen and conductors, will have to operate experimental trains through the tunnel before regular service can begin. E. P. Bryan, vice-president of the Interborough, will call on Chairman Wilcox of the Public Service Commission to-morrow in connection with the opening of the new service. The experimental trains will be started to-morrow or Tuesday. All the express trains of the Lenox avenue line will be operated to the Brooklyn Borough Hall. Between there and the Brooklyn Bridge station will take eight minutes. This means a service under a three-minute headway in the rush hours. From that the headway will increase to six minutes and more, the greatest headway being fifteen minutes, between 1:30 and 4:35 a. m. When the express trains are taken off the Lenox avenue locals will be run through to Brooklyn, their terminus at such times now being at the Battery. The Broadway locals, which now go around the City Hall loop at all hours of the day and night, will be run through to the Battery after the withdrawal of the expresses in the future. This will improving with small tenement houses and one and two family frame houses. "The Real Estate Record and Guide," in an article about the outlook says: "It seems that the owners of real estate in Manhattan and The Bronx may regard their present situation with complacency and the future with confidence. They cannot look forward to any such degree of prosperity as that which they have enjoyed during the last six years, but they can rest assured that what they have they can keep, and that this stationary period will only be a prelude to another period of perhaps even greater good fortune—at least for some of them. Much, of course, will depend upon the activity of general business during the next two years—in the celerity and completeness of the recovery from the prevailing prices. But it must be remembered that even comparative business inactivity will not be wholly without certain benefits to the owner of real estate. The period of business prosperity has been on the whole a period of tight money. Large sums have been borrowed at abnormally high rates of interest, and this fact has increased very considerably the expense account of many owners of real estate. A period of comparative business inactivity should enable many owners of real estate to renew their mortgages at lower rates and thus to reduce their carrying charges. Indeed, we expect to see during the next few years a large increase in the popularity of mortgage as an investment. Such an increase can hardly take place so long as good railroad bonds and stocks command the low prices which they do at present. "The first result of a more plentiful supply of money will undoubtedly be a higher level of values on the Stock Exchange. But the second result will be the investment of large sums in real estate mortgages. The ultimate effect of the crisis and of the persistent political agitation against the railroads will be to make cautious investors accept a lower rate of interest on mortgages as compared to railroad securities than they formerly would; if good should be the case the owners of real estate will be in a better position to borrow money on the good terms than they have been for many years." The opportunities for profitable speculative buying of real estate will be fewer in the near future than they have been in the past, but there should be enough to keep the capital of the professional operators well employed. Taking a large view of the speculative landscape, its main feature may be described in a comparatively few words. In Manhattan it will be business property centrally situated which will offer the best opportunities for profitable purchase. In the other boroughs the money will be made chiefly in the development of residential neighborhoods. There is bound to be a great shifting of population for some time. The bulk of the yearly increase will take up their habitations on the other side of the waters which environ Manhattan, because it will be increasingly easy for them to go to and from residences on the outskirts of the city. But the very condition which will diminish the comparative availability of Manhattan as a place of residence will contribute to its existing advantage as a place of business. Improved means of communication will merely the Manhattan fighter to the other boroughs. The residents of those boroughs and of New Jersey who now come very seldom to Manhattan either for business or pleasure because the transit is so inconvenient will hereafter make the journey much more frequently, and the effect of this new condition will be very much to improve the business prosperity of all that part of the borough affected by the retail trade, the theatres and the restaurants.
