

REVOLUTIONARY UPRISINGS IN PERSIA AND MEXICO THREATEN CIVIL REBELLION.

The flame of revolution still seems to be spreading in Persia and Northern Mexico. While the Shah of Persia has put down the Nationalist rebellion in Teheran, his soldiers demolishing the parliament building and hanging the leaders, revolutionists and soldiers are fighting in other Persian cities. Although the Mexican government insists that the attacks on several small cities in the State of Chihuahua have been made by outlaws and not organized revolutionists, it is rushing troops to the northern frontier and guarding heavily the towns in the zone in which the insurgents are operating. United States cavalry and Texas Rangers are watching the border line in Texas to prevent any violation of the neutrality laws.

THE NORTH FRONT OF THE AMERICAN LEGATION AT TEHERAN.

TYPE OF PERSIAN POLICE WHICH CARRIED OUT THE SHAH'S WISHES UNDER COSSACK COMMANDERS.

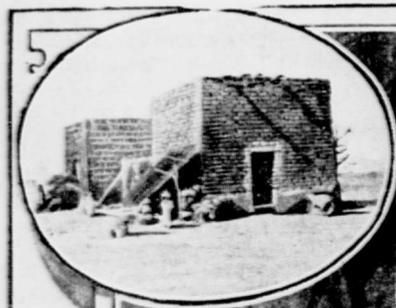

THE PERSIAN METHOD OF HANGING. According to telegraphic dispatches, several members of the National Council were hanged at Teheran last week.

THE FACADE OF THE PARLIAMENT BUILDING AT TEHERAN. This building was attacked by the Shah's forces and defended partially from the roof. It was afterward looted and left practically in ruins.

A MEXICAN ADOBE HOUSE WITHOUT WINDOW

ONE OF THE DISCONTENTED.

MEXICAN TROOPERS PREPARING TO TAKE THE FIELD ON THE NORTHERN FRONTIER.