WHAT GILES THOUGHT.

Old Giles, who goes out as attendant to gentlemen during the fishing season, is full of local gossip and small scandal, and when the natural supply falls him he is able to manufacture enough to go on with. "I were out with the Bishop yesterday," said the old man, referring to a popular Church dignitary, who is also a good fisherman. "Ah," replied his employer, "he's a good man."

CASONE IN HIS GRAVE

Friends and Enemies Follow Self-Confessed Murderer's Body.

The word "finis" was attached to the stormy, battle-scarred life of Raphael Casone yesterday when he was laid at rest, amid the devout prayers and silent, intense curses of friend and foe. The funeral was held at the home of the self-confessed murderer, at No. 112 Mulberry street, in the afternoon, where the body had lain since the day before. While mourning and merely curious persons gathered about the bier of the dead man it was whispered that the dreaded Casone had confessed to having murdered six men in his life. This confession had been wrung from the killer of men while he was on his knees in the Hudson Street Hospital last Wednesday morning.

Casone was shot and fatally wounded last Tuesday night as he left his home by Amato Santanelli, a seventeen-year-old boy, the brother of one of Casone's victims. Amato had vowed he would avenge his brother's death six years ago, when a boy of eleven, still in Italy. He waited patiently until such time as he should become a man and slaved and saved in his native land until he had hoarded sufficient money to pay his passage to America. His opportunity came last Tuesday, and he shot Casone in the back, even as the latter had murdered his brother and his brother's friend.

In paying this debt of vengeance, however, young Amato almost gave up his own life, for when he was caught and brought before his hated enemy for identification Casone made a dying effort and plunged a stiletto into Amato's back and abdomen. Dangerously wounded as he was and tossing on a bed of pain, the boy's face, bedded up with joy when he was told that Casone had died. His mission was fulfilled and his oath made good.

Early yesterday Police Commissioner Baker had refused a permit for a public funeral and cortege, word having been brought to him that on account of Casone's numerous enemies an attack on the hearse was probable. Later in the day, however, this order was abrogated, and the usual procession and band, with its medley of wind, musical dirges, paraded through the streets, followed by a crowd of his friends and enemies. So the funeral procession passed on through the city streets, over the Williamsburg Bridge and to the final resting place in Calvary cemetery.

In the course of the procession were Captain Galvin of the Elizabeth street station, and his men, placed there to prevent possible bloodshed or riot, but no trouble developed. While all were exiting after the hearse, their attention was claimed again by the sight of several men carrying an immense candle. It was fourteen feet high, a foot in diameter, and weighed three hundred pounds. It will be sent to the Church of Our Lady of Pompei, in Pompeii, Italy, where it will be lighted on the second day of November each year.

In spite of his record of crime, Casone was one of the most devout men of his race. When he was freed, after his trial for the murder of Charlemagne Santanelli and Terigo Santanelli, he made the pilgrimage, in bare feet, and carrying a giant candle, from the Tombs to the Church of Our Lady of Mount Carmel, at 116th street and First avenue. Here he prostrated himself before the altar of the Madonna and registered a vow that should he be spared by his enemies, he would have built the largest candle possible, and have it burned for him. He kept his word, and that candle is still burning in the Cathedral of the Holy Spirit.

The crime for which this sinister gun fighter and wielder of the stiletto paid his final debt occurred in 1903, when Raphael Casone followed his victims through the streets, a shotgun loaded with slugs on his arm. He poured the contents of both barrels into their backs, giving them no chance for life. He was tried and acquitted of the crime in 1907.

Coroner Harburger said yesterday that he took Casone's ante-mortem statement half an hour before the Italian died, and that he confessed to only two murders.

FIREMAN FALLS FROM ENGINE, KILLED.

Charles E. Meadows, engineer of Engine Company 35, whose quarters are at Main street, Astoria, was killed last Friday night while responding to a false alarm of fire. Meadows, who was riding on the rear of the engine, noticed that a bolt was working loose and reached over to fix it. The lurching of the engine as it turned into Third avenue threw him forward so that his head hit one of the rear wheels. He fell to the ground and died before medical aid could be obtained. His skull had been fractured. He was thirty-four years old and lived at No. 143 Newell street, Greenpoint.

CITY HALL TO BLAZE WITH LIGHTS.

Linenmen were at work yesterday stringing the wires on the City Hall which are to carry the innumerable lights and bunting for the City Hall Hudson-Fulton celebration decorations. Ryan, the City Hall janitor, was out at an early hour contemplating the linenmen. He said that there would be 1,000 electric lights and that new flags would be flying from the poles on the roof of the building.

TO CONSIDER REFORM.

Mercantile Exchange Will Discuss Hughes Committee Suggestion.

The members of the New York Mercantile Exchange will hold a meeting on Tuesday to decide whether official quotations shall be continued. The criticisms directed toward the exchange by Governor Hughes's Wall Street investigating committee, which in its recent report recommended, as in the case of the New York Metal Exchange, that inasmuch as the quotations were not a record of actual transactions the charter be repealed and the function of the official quotations were not fully understood. At the same time it appears that the practice of making quotations by vote of committees, often without actual foundation in recorded daily sales of the technical grades specified, as is now the custom, is the foundation of the actual transactions the charter be repealed and the function of the official quotations were not fully understood.
