CARNEGIE SAVES THE DAY

An Honorary Member in Scots-less Princeton Class.

Princeton, May 11 (Special).—The reply of Andrew Carnegie to the class of '94 of Princeton University, when the announcement was made to him that he had been elected to honorary membership to that class, was made public to-day for the first time.

Perusal of yours of the 12th gave me unusual pleasure, and the arrival of the photograph, which I have just examined, has added hereto. Even if there is no-born Scot in the picture, there are many who can well pass for true-born lads of that favored land, to which Princeton University owes so much.

Imagine what pleasure a note similar to that which you have addressed to me would have given the father of Princeton, that good Fifehead Scot, John Witherspoon, Walpole informed the House of Commons that the American colonies had been run away with by a Presbyterian minister, and he was not far wrong.

CORNWALL'S NEW DUKE

Although Not Sixteen, He Has by Statute Attained His Majority.

Copyright, 1910, by the Brentwood Company. Through King George's accession to the throne, his eldest son, Prince Edward, who will be sixteen years old in June and who is known in his family circle by the nickname of "David," becomes, ipso facto, Duke of Cornwall. Moreover, he could, if he wished, in spite of being a mere boy, sit in the House of Lords, since by statute the Dukes of Cornwall, no matter how tender their years, are always of age. A Duke of Cornwall is subject to no minority, in respect either of political and civil rights or in regard to the revenues and possessions of his dukedom, and, owing to this, when the Duke of Cornwall is an infant, a special act of Parliament must be passed by both houses of the national legislature to enable his mother, Queen Victoria, to administer the duchy and its revenues until he attained manhood.

To be a Duke of Cornwall one must be a son of the sovereign, as well as her apparent. If the latter is not a son of the monarch, but merely a grandson, he cannot be invested by the crown with the dukedom of Cornwall, and his titles, honors, prerogatives, such as brotherhood, nobility, and the like, are similarly barred, and in such an event the revenues of the duchy are turned over to the sovereign.

The dukedom of Cornwall comes to Prince Edward as a right, by virtue of his position as eldest son and heir of the King. The title of Prince of Wales will come to him as a result of an act of grace on the part of his father. The monarch is under no obligation to bestow the dignity of Prince of Wales upon his first-born. Edward VII, for instance, did not confer the title of Prince of Wales upon his son until the latter had completed his tour of the colonies, on board the steamship Ombic, that is to say, he was more than a year after the death of Queen Victoria.

The dignity of Prince of Wales carries with it no revenues, nor even prerogatives, and its holder sits in the House of Lords and is enabled to take part in its deliberations not as Prince of Wales, but as Duke of Cornwall.

Contrary to the popular impression, the title of Prince of Wales, as borne by the British heir apparent, is older than that of the Duke of Cornwall. Edward I was the first King of England to create his eldest son Prince of Wales, with the object of reconciling the Welsh chieftains to English domination after the death of Llewellyn, the last Welsh prince. It was not until the reign of Edward III that the latter raised the earldom of Cornwall into a dukedom and bestowed it upon his son, Edward the Black Prince, with the provision that it should always be held by the heir apparent who was the son of the sovereign. Prior to Edward III the earldom of Cornwall was held by the king's eldest son, but it was not until the reign of Edward III that the latter raised the earldom of Cornwall into a dukedom and bestowed it upon his son, Edward the Black Prince, with the provision that it should always be held by the heir apparent who was the son of the sovereign.

The Duke of Cornwall's property is not, as in olden times, restricted more or less to the county of Cornwall. In fact, the estates which he now owns in the county do not extend over an area of more than twelve thousand acres, whereas, as Duke of Cornwall, he owns more than fifty thousand acres in Devonshire, many thousand acres more in the neighboring county of Somerset and a large amount of real estate in London. Thus the greater part of what was once known as the Lanneth Marsh and most of that southern portion of London now known as Kennington belongs to the Duke of Cornwall.

It is from this London property that the new duke will derive the major portion of his revenues. The land is let out on ninety-nine year leases, and until these leases fall in the Duke of Cornwall for the time being, no matter how much he may be the ground landlord and draw money by the ground rent, he has no direct interest in the buildings, so long as the terms of the lease are not broken. It is owing to this that the new heir apparent finds himself in possession of some of the most disgraceful slums in the British metropolis, for the condition of which, however, neither he nor his father nor yet his grandfather is in any way really responsible. Not until the leases fall in, either through expiration or through non-payment of ground rent, will the Duke of Cornwall have the right to resume control of the land, to take possession of the buildings erected there by the leaseholders, and to use the objectionable premises as he may see fit to manage the property.

Queen Alexandra's Dowry Houses. While the terms of the will of King Edward will be withheld from the public, as was the case with the testamentary dispositions of his father, the Prince Consort, and of his mother, the late Queen Victoria, it has been known for some time that the court circles in England, and his left Sandringham, which is his private property, to Queen Alexandra for life. It has been her principal home in England ever since her marriage, forty-seven years ago, and within its borders she, rather than her husband, has always been the dominant figure. The punishment brought upon, and there is not a corner in the whole domain which does not bear the trace of her personal tastes and with which she is not identified. A perfect ruin and almost completely neglected in the '90s, it was purchased for the late King by his trustees while he was touring in this country, during the Presidency of Mr. Buchanan, and large sums have been expended in transforming it into one of the most charming country seats in England, standing in a beautiful park, and surrounded by gardens which are the work of the greatest landscape artist, Lord Rosedale.

PRINCE SORRY AT SAILING

Likes New York and Hopes to Get Back—"Big Tim" on Ship.

The Cunard liner Mauretania left port for Liverpool yesterday with a large passenger complement, including Prince Tokugawa Iyasato, William Randolph Hearst, Timothy D. Sullivan and Martin W. Littleton. The prince, "Big Tim" and Mr. Littleton walked the deck for a half hour before the liner cleared, talked for publication and posed before cameras when requested to do so by the photographers.

The prince was sorry he had to leave this city so soon. He had seen something of New York, but not enough, and he hoped to come here again. He said he wished to convey his thanks to the city for its kindly reception, and expressed the opinion that the relations between this country and Japan were most cordial.

"Some people think otherwise, but what difference does that make?" he asked. "As things are now the fine friendship existing between my country and America will last forever."

The prince, who is on his way home, will visit several European cities before taking the Trans-Siberian Railway to the Pacific. "Big Tim" Sullivan said he was going aboard on pleasure and a little business. He will visit England, Ireland and France, but he said he would "cut out" any sight-seeing if it interfered with his schedule for seeing the Jeffries-Johnson fight in California in July.

When they were about midway in the stream the wire seemed to catch on the bottom of the river. They then turned the boat upstream. This pulled the stern down and the boat filled. The occupants sprang into the water. One of the party was saved, but young Cathcart and the oarsman were drowned. The body of the former was not recovered. The punishment committee in passed by the Legislature, the executive and legislative functions will be vested in a council of five, one member of which is to be elected every year.

The question of having the city of Mount Vernon annexed by a commission, as outlined in the bill now before the Senate, was voted on favorably some months ago by the citizens of that place. SAGE CHURCH DEDICATED Services Held in Costly Memorial Edifice at Far Rockaway.

The Russell Sage Memorial Church, given to the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Far Rockaway by Mrs. Sage in memory of her husband, was dedicated yesterday. Mrs. Sage was present. The Far Rockaway church was the place of worship for the Sages when they lived at Cedarhurst, and it became their home church, and in it the funeral for Mr. Sage was held.

While the congregation of some four hundred persons was gathering there was a parade on the organ, which is a part of the gift. It cost $3,500. The ministers forming the Presbytery of Nassau attended in a body, with the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Sholey, the moderator, leading. The pastor of the church, the Rev. Dr. Robert G. Leitch, and his lay officers, followed.

The Rev. Mr. Leitch chanted passages from the Psalms, and the choir and congregation responded as the procession moved. The Doxology was sung, after which the Rev. Charles H. Sholey offered the invocation and the Rev. Lyman D. Callkins read from the Scriptures. The dedication of the church by the Rev. Mr. Leitch and members of the congregation followed.

The Russell Sage Memorial Church represents an outlay of about $400,000. Mrs. Sage has also provided an endowment fund of $100,000. The Sage memorial window is said to be the largest and most expensive ever produced by the Tiffany Company.

ART FOR "ROTARY EXHIBITION." Halsey C. Ives, director of the St. Louis Art Museum, came to New York yesterday to select a hundred and fifty pictures for the current exhibition of the American Water Color Society for the year 1910. The exhibition of the best things in the society's annual exhibition, rotating from city to city. These "rotary exhibitions" have been enjoyed by many thousands of visitors in St. Louis, Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Detroit, Chicago and other cities. Applications from other cities have recently been so numerous that the time for keeping out the next "rotary exhibition" will be extended to the fall of 1911. This year it was impossible to accommodate one-half of the institutions that applied to have the exhibition held in various cities.

J. C. Nicoll, president of the American Water Color Society, gave a private dinner last evening at the Century Club for Mr. Ives and a number of well known artists.
