ROOSEVELTISMS

Some of the Famous Sayings of America's Only Ex-President.

Theodore Roosevelt has a faculty for enunciating axioms with such downright sincerity and almost hypnotic force that they seldom sound like commonplace. Here are some that have or will become famous:

"Sentimentality is the most broken reed on which righteousness can lean."

"I have no use for an ideal so lofty that it can be taken out only on Sunday to admire, and must be kept in cotton wool the remainder of the week."

"In the long run the fig tree is judged by the fact that it produces figs and not thistles."

"It is idle to raise a man unless the woman is raised at the same time."

"A practical man without ideals is a curse, and the greater his ability the greater a curse he is."

"The impracticable idealist does not always attain the degree of being a curse, but invariably he becomes a nuisance."

"Beware of the man who does not translate his words into deeds."

"Countries must be strong in order to be good and to help the weak against the overbearing."

"The poorest way to face life is to face it with a sneer."

"The man who does nothing cuts the same sordid figure in the pages of history, whether he be cynic, or fop, or voluptuary."

"There is little use for the being whose tepid soul knows nothing of the great and generous emotion, of the high pride, the stern belief, the lofty enthusiasm of the men who quell the storm and ride the thunder."

"It is the warworn Hotspur, spent with hard fighting, he of the many errors and the vallant end, over whose memory we love to linger, not over the memory of the young lord who, 'but for the vile guns would have been a soldier.'"

"It is a bad thing for a nation to raise and to admire a false standard of success; and there can be no falser standard than that set by dedication of material wellbeing in and for itself."

"The first essential in any civilization is that the man and the woman shall be father and mother of healthy children, so that the race shall increase and not decrease."

"The man who for any cause for which he is himself accountable has failed to support himself and those for whom he is responsible ought to feel that he has fallen lamentably short in his prime duty."

"When it clearly appears that there is a real conflict between them, human rights must have the upper hand, for property belongs to man and not man to property."

"The power of the journalist is great, but he is entitled neither to respect nor admiration because of that power unless it is used aright."

"The excuse advanced for vicious writing, that the public demands it and that the demand must be supplied, can no more be admitted than if it were advanced by the purveyors of food who sell poisonous adulterations."

"There is nothing to be done with that type
