Russia and Japan's Convention Regarding Railways.

NO MUTUAL COMPETITION

Status Quo in Manchuria Upheld—Indications of a Defensive Alliance.

St. Petersburg, July 6.—The Russo-Japanese convention, covering interests of the two nations in the Far East, which was signed on Monday by M. Iswolsky, Minister of Foreign Affairs, and Ambassador Motono, for Japan, expresses the sincere attachment of the two governments to the principles of the Russo-Japanese convention of July 30, 1907. It says that they desire, by the present instrument, to develop and perfect the arrangements of that treaty.

With the object of facilitating communication and commerce between the two nations, they pledge their friendly co-operation to the task of improving the service of the railroads, and agree to abstain from all harmful competition. They announce the determination to observe the status quo in Manchuria, as defined by the treaties, conventions and other existing arrangements between Russia, Japan and China.

The convention contains a clause providing that if the status quo is menaced the contracting powers will enter each time into communication, with the object of agreeing on measures for the maintenance of conditions. The technical agreement regarding traffic rates and other details of railway administration is not yet ready for publication.

Under the Russo-Japanese convention signed July 30, 1907, each of the contracting parties undertook to respect the territorial integrity of the other, as well as all rights accruing to one or the other of the high contracting parties from existing treaties, agreements or conventions in force between the high contracting parties and China, as far as the rights were not incompatible with the principle of equality enunciated in the treaty signed at Portsmouth on September 5, 1905, and in the special conventions concluded between Japan and Russia.

Both contracting parties recognized the independence and territorial integrity of China as well as the principle of equal opportunity in commerce and industry for all nations in the said empire. They also pledged themselves to uphold the maintenance of the status quo and the respect of this principle with all peaceful means at their disposal.

American Piano Company in Case.

In October, none of the notes having been paid, Chapman applied for renewals, and was met with the proposition, according to his answer, that he buy from the company for $120,000 200 shares of the American Piano Company common stock and pay a bonus of $2,000. Chapman declares the piano stock was and is worthless and absolutely unmarketable. He includes the price he paid for it and the bonus in his charges of usury.

Including, then, all these items and interest his indebtedness stood in October, 1909, at $66,245.78. He gave the company a note for this amount. To secure it, he says, he put up collateral, besides that originally applied to the $27,000 loan, consisting of five thousand shares of Standard Motor Construction Company stock, one hundred United Surety Company stock, one hundred shares of the Whilden and Hancock Metropolitan Insurance Agency stock, two hundred shares of American Piano Company common, and $20,000 Granite Spring Water Company 6 per cent bonds.
