WATSON WITHDRAWS ENTRY

Disagrees with Judges When Ribbon is Awarded to C. H. Mackay's Pair.

The horse show which opened at Mineola yesterday afternoon bids fair to be the most successful exhibition ever held on the pretty Long Island show grounds.

The saddle and jumping classes were so well filled that it was necessary to divide some of them, but there was a dearth of heavy harness classes, which proved a disappointment to those who are particularly devoted to that type of horse.

Class 1 was a special pony class, which brought out the oldest and the smallest ponies and the youngest and the smallest riders ever seen at a show.

CHANLER BEGINS FIGHT

Revokes Power of Attorney Given to Cavalieri.

BROTHER MAKES STATEMENT

Knows of No Suit, but First Wife, Children and Creditors Must Be Protected.

Robert Winthrop Chanler has revoked the power of attorney conferred on Lina Cavalieri, his prima donna wife, which, according to the famous ante-nuptial agreement, he conferred on her for life.

The trustees of the two estates from which Chanler's property is derived and W. Russell Osborn, attorney for Cavalieri, would naturally be those on whom such an instrument would be served.

That part of the ante-nuptial agreement conferring the power of attorney on Cavalieri reads in part: "And for the purpose of securing the payment of the said yearly sum of $20,000, and only for such purpose, the said party of the first part doth hereby make, constitute and appoint the party of the second part his true and lawful attorney, irrevocable."

Coupled, however, with Mr. Harris's declaration that he would answer the summons and complaint filed in the suit of Mrs. Johanna Bohemia Chanler, his client's first wife, to set aside the agreement, it is taken to mean that just such a fight will be made.

A man in close touch with Chanler said yesterday that "Sheriff Bob's" brothers would not come to his assistance financially on several occasions in the past, but only to come to the rescue.

"Of course," said the speaker, "that doesn't mean that he will ever have to go without the necessities of life, such as food and shelter, but he must settle this last business himself. All the other amounts which the brothers have given out at different times they have been good enough to wipe off the slate, but now it's up to Robert. The family will stick to him, no doubt, so far as their moral support is concerned, though the whole trouble."

Mr. Harris was unwilling to say where his client was at present further than that he was out of the state, "gone away off." Not to France, though, he intimated. In regard to a possible correspondence between Chanler and his wife, the lawyer said:

"I don't know whether he has been in communication with her or not. But he may have, for all that."

William Astor Chanler, Robert's brother, is quoted extensively in cable dispatches from Paris in an attempt to rectify "a general misconception regarding the attitude" of his brother.

"When Robert met Mme. Cavalieri I am sure he believed the great dream of his life was about to be realized," said William Astor Chanler. "He idealized her beauty; he saw in her his perfect happiness. So believing, he acted on impulse; he placed himself before her as an honorable suitor; he offered her his name, his fortune, all that he could give her. I know him well enough to know that had she demanded my brother's life he would have offered it to her."

"He consulted no one about his marriage. His mind was made up. I was in Africa, in the Sahara, at the time, and knew nothing of his plans until I heard he was married. When I saw him here in Paris with his wife he appeared to be the happiest of men, but it was not for long."

"Friends here have told me that Robert expressed time and again his desire to give everything he had in the world to Mme. Cavalieri. That he was madly infatuated there is no doubt. I was told he would not even allow his own lawyer to draw up the agreement, preferring that Mme. Cavalieri's lawyer should have sole charge of the arrangements, putting in the agreement whatever clauses she wished."

"I repeat that there has been no talk of any suit to enforce the agreement except in the newspapers. If such an offer should be made it will, of course, be accepted, besides my brother. The interests of his children must be fully protected and his first wife has her dower share and her alimony, which, of course, the courts will see are not infringed. And, lastly, the rights of my brother's creditors must be respected."

IMITATES LINA CAVALIERI

Immigrant Girl Won't Wed Unless She Gets Ante-Nuptial Contract.

A disciple of Mme. Cavalieri has been discovered in one Johanna Chanler, a comely Bohemian miss, who is being detained on Ellis Island because she refused to wed Peter Jollish, of New Bedford, Mass., until he signs an ante-nuptial agreement.

Johanna, who is twenty-eight, met Peter, who is fifty-eight, in Bohemia last summer, and both came over to this country in the second cabin of the Kronprinz Wilhelm, of the North German Lloyd Line. Peter, being an American citizen, was allowed to land, but Johanna was taken to Ellis Island, where the ardent suitor was informed that he could obtain her release only by marrying her on the spot.

He was only too willing, but Johanna emphatically declared that before she became his bride he would have to bring along his deeds and sign over a bit of the wealth he had been boasting about to her. Peter pleaded in vain. He made several trips to the island; his near-betrothed would not yield a fraction of a jot.

Yesterday the authorities told the low-spirited Jollish that he would have to reach a decision before Tuesday or his Johanna would be shipped back to the Old World on the vessel in which they had crossed. So Peter took a great resolve, kissed Johanna and rushed off, saying he would be back with the papers.
