

Anglo-American Memories

SIR HENRY IRVING—HIS DIRECT, PERSONAL, CONTINUING INFLUENCE ON THE ENGLISH STAGE.

It is agreed that no small part of the glory of a great master is in his disciples. Plato and the Platonists, Christ and the Apostles and other saints, and the Greek dramatists and the dramatists who down to this day drink at the fountain of Aeschylus and Sophocles—in each case the school not only carries on the tradition but enlarges the fame of the founder. The rule holds good on the stage—all the more so since original genius is rare and tradition always potent. In Irving's case it was perhaps more stringent than in any case of which we have any full account. To those of us at any rate, who saw and knew Irving, and who see and know some of the actors of to-day, the authority of the actor who is gone is evident. Most of what is good on the English stage to-day is directly traceable to Irving. Likewise some things which are less good.

As generalizing in such matters is futile, I will explain what I mean by examples, and examples of the best, which is the true way of judging. Irving was what is called an actor-manager. In that dual capacity he was succeeded by Sir Squire Bancroft, Sir Charles Wyndham, Mr. Kendal and Sir John Hare in partnership, Mr. Arthur Bourchier and Mr. George Alexander. There have been, and are, others, like Mr. Edward Terry, who was, and Mr. Cyril Maude, who is, content to produce farces. They owe, except as managers, nothing to Irving, and Irving is in no way responsible for them. Irving, it is true, sometimes played in farce, but he played it as comedy. Mr. Maude has been seen in pieces which might be called comedies, but he plays them as farces. The difference between these two methods is considerable. If you like to go to the Playhouse in Northumberland avenue to-day you may see Mr. Cyril Maude in a piece called "Tantamount Tommy," announced as a comedy adapted from the French. It is a comedy in the bills and a farce, one character excepted, on the stage. Mr. Maude has at one moment to make it clear to the house that he has been disturbed at his toilet. He does it by parading about the stage with his braces hanging down his back to his knees. Can you imagine Irving doing it? Irving was always willing to get an effect, but never by vulgar means.

The exception is Miss Marie Lohr. Whether Miss Lohr, who is but twenty years of age, ever saw Irving I cannot say. But she is, in some things, of the same type. For this young lady has distinction, refinement, delicacy, which were among Irving's qualities. They are not transmissible, not teachable, but she made use of them on the stage as he would. If, as I imagine, Miss Lohr is her own teacher she none the less breathes the air which Irving breathed, and has come under the spell which that great tragedian laid upon the stage. She does not imitate, but she cannot be insensible to an inspiration. Even the atmosphere of Mr. Maude's Playhouse has not stifled or perverted her natural impulses. It is no light thing to recompose a part and, while playing a piece which is trivial and common, to remain the commediante she is. But that is what Miss Marie Lohr is. But for some 250 nights as "Tommy," and it is what neither she nor anybody else could have done if Irving had not transformed and uplifted the theatrical life of England and breathed a new spirit into the players. Mr. George Alexander stands in a mere direct relation to Irving. He was with him for some years, both here and America, as a member of the Lyceum company. Mr. Alexander is a man of great intelligence, who had a great opportunity. It may be true, as Rocheblaud says, that the only good copies of these which reveal to us the faults of the original. But the answer to that is, in this case, that Mr. Alexander understood nothing. I should say that he studied Irving's methods; accepted some and rejected others; knew what were his own resources and what he knew; and he was able to improve to-day. Dr. W. W. Golden, the family physician, made a long visit to the residence this morning and ascertained the cause of his patient's illness. It is connected with the upper intestines, and produces an intense pain akin to acute indigestion. While the disease in some instances is fatal, death is not inevitable. Dr. Golden assured the patient that Senator Elkins's strong vitality was in his favor. It is said that Dent Taylor, of Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, consulting expert in the case, is expected here soon.

Bianke Elkins, Senator Elkins's son, said this afternoon that he did not believe his father would be able to attend the opening of Congress, but would undoubtedly be present before the close of the session. The family is optimistic, and thinks the Senator will recover his health through the continuation of the rest treatment. Senator Elkins is confined to his room.

SENATOR ELKINS'S CONDITION Ailment Diagnosed as a Serious Intestinal Malady.

Elkins, W. Va., Oct. 22.—After a restless night and morning, Senator Stephen B. Elkins, who is ill at his home, here, is here, and is somewhat improved to-day. Dr. W. W. Golden, the family physician, made a long visit to the residence this morning and ascertained the cause of his patient's illness. It is connected with the upper intestines, and produces an intense pain akin to acute indigestion. While the disease in some instances is fatal, death is not inevitable. Dr. Golden assured the patient that Senator Elkins's strong vitality was in his favor. It is said that Dent Taylor, of Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, consulting expert in the case, is expected here soon.

COST OF GOING THROUGH YALE Average More than $1,000 a Year—Some Live on $375.

New Haven, Oct. 22.—It costs a Yale man at least $1,000 a year on an average to go through the course at that university. A through card canvass of last year's freshman class shows that 114 spent an average of $1,023 each, 117 sophomores $1,100 and 119 juniors $1,133. The lavish expenditures of a few men sent up the general average to $1,122, for twenty-one reported expenses of from $1,000 to $2,500 each, and six sophomores from $200 to $2,500 each, eight juniors from $200 to $2,500 each, while at the other extreme nineteen freshmen used less than $500 each, eighteen sophomores less than $500 each and sixteen juniors less than $500. Of the fifty-three men last mentioned, twenty lived on less than $375 for the college year.

NEW YORK FROM THE SUBURBS.

New York City is to have a committee of five to censor plays. But who will censor plays that have their premieres in suburban theaters and then go to New York? Syracuse Juniors will be organized for the purpose of refusing any "insulting" rights. Walters would preserve their "quite respect" at any cost—under a quarter— Rochester Post-Express.

OBITUARY.

LOUIS L. LORILLARD. Louis L. Lorillard, a well known yachtman and club member, died on Friday night from a complication of his diseases at the Hotel Mercedes Park, according to the cable dispatch received in this city yesterday. Accompanied by his wife, who was Miss Katherine Beekman, daughter of Gilbert L. Beekman, and his son, Louis L. Lorillard, Jr., Mr. Lorillard went abroad last spring for his health. It is understood that he had intended to return to this country last month. Mr. Lorillard also leaves two other sons, George L. and Beckman Lorillard, and three sisters, Mrs. Henry L. Barbey, Mrs. Lawrence and Mrs. James P. Kernochan, and a cousin, Lorillard Spencer. George L. Lorillard is attached to the American Legation at Copenhagen in Denmark. Born in this city, the son of Peter Lorillard, who died in Saratoga in 1867, Mr. Lorillard was the youngest of four brothers who were prominent socially in New York and Newport. Of the four Pierre was the oldest, Jacob the second, and George, who died in England, the third. Pierre Lorillard amassed a fortune in the wholesale tobacco business, and was also a famous horseman, having carried off the honors in a Derby. When Louis Lorillard became of age he was considered one of the wealthiest young men in New York. Soon afterwards he became interested in yachting and purchased a schooner which he named Eya, after one of his sisters. Finding this too small for entertaining purposes, Mr. Lorillard built the Wanderer, which in her day represented the most up-to-date schooner. In this he made many long trips to sea. He abandoned it shortly after his marriage. A cottage worth several hundred dollars was left to him by a relative, Miss Catherine Lorillard Wolfe, in her will. Mr. Lorillard was a member of the Union, New York Yacht and St. Anthony clubs and the St. Nicholas Society.

PATRICK J. DOLAN.

Pittsburg, Oct. 22.—Patrick J. Dolan, ex-president of the Pittsburg district organization of United Mine Workers of America, and one of the best known labor leaders in the country, was killed to-night while trying to board a train for his home at McAdams, Penn. He slipped and fell under the wheels of a train once run for president of the United Mine Workers of America against Mitchell, but lost the fight. Patrick Dolan, ex-president of the United Mine Workers of the Pittsburg district, came into prominence during the labor war of 1902. He was born in Scotland in 1828 and began working in the coal mines at the age of nine. In 1888 he came to this country and rose rapidly until he became district president of the miners' organization in Lockport, Pa. He was elected delegate to Congress in 1902. He was elected to the national convention of the United Mine Workers of America in January, 1906. The delegates voted that an increase of 12 1/2 per cent be asked for the next scale year. President Dolan and the other delegates to the national convention were instructed to vote therefor for this increase. At a meeting of the national convention the following week Dolan disregarded these instructions and voted to accept the offer of F. L. Robbins, leader of the operators, to continue the former scale. An uproar followed and Dolan was denounced as a traitor. An attempt was made to oust him from the convention, but it failed. The delegates went back to his own district, and for a month he successfully resisted every effort to oust him. He was at last forced out, however.

PROFESSOR CARL S. HALLBERG.

Chicago, Oct. 22.—Carl Svante Nicander Hallberg, professor of pharmacy of the University of Illinois, and who served on the commission for revision of the national formulary, 1888, 1895 and 1906, died at his home here to-day, aged fifty-four years. Professor Hallberg was a native of Sweden, where he was born in 1856. He came to this country in 1883 and was graduated from the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy in 1887. He became professor of pharmacy in the University of Illinois in 1890. He was also professor of pharmacology in the Illinois Medical College in 1894 and 1896. He organized in 1885 the National Institute of Pharmacology.

THOMAS S. BROWN.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Oct. 22.—Thomas S. Brown, one of our prominent designers of agricultural machinery in this country, died at his home in this city last night in his eighty-seventh year. Mr. Brown was born in England, and came to this country in infancy. His grandfather, Thomas Brown, was a smith and founder at Alton, England, where he built reaping machines and steam engines. Thomas S. Brown went to California as a "forty-niner." He was an engineer on the Pacific Ocean, and studied marine engineering. Returning East, he became associated with the manufacturers of the Buckley mowers and reapers, and was for nearly fifty years plant superintendent for the firm of Adams, Platt and Co. in this city. He was an inventor of many patents for this firm. Mr. Brown's father and two uncles were English soldiers in the battle of Waterloo. Mr. Brown was prominent in the social life of Poughkeepsie, and as a member of the Dutchess Club he had assisted in entertaining many men of national reputation when they were visitors to Poughkeepsie. He leaves a wife and one daughter, Mrs. Nelson L. Boies, of this city.

F. DANA REED.

F. Dana Reed, who was a member of the editorial staff of "The Brooklyn Daily Eagle" for thirty-seven years, died on Friday evening at his home, No. 561 1/2 Broadway, Brooklyn. He suffered an attack of heart weakness last summer. On Friday he got out "copy" for Saturday's issue and went home. After supper he joined his wife in the library, and was attacked by heart disease and died before a doctor could be called. Mr. Reed was born in 1848 at West Saie, N. Y. He came to New York City in 1871 and obtained employment as a reporter, working on "The Times" and "The Tribune," finally becoming city editor of "The Commercial Advertiser." He went to "The Eagle" in 1872. The funeral will be held on Tuesday afternoon at his late home. The burial will take place at Verbank, Dutchess County, N. Y.

MAJOR HENRY DAVIS.

London, Oct. 22.—Major Henry Davis, formerly of Syracuse, N. Y., died at his London residence to-day. Recently he had made his home at the Villa Floridiana, in Naples. His daughter, Miss, who died in this city in 1908, was Lady Maudon, the second wife of Sir John Fletcher Moulton.

MILITARY GOVERNOR OF PARIS.

Paris, Oct. 22.—General Michael Joseph Maunoury was to-day appointed Military Governor of Paris, to replace General Jules Dalstein, who retires because of his advanced age.

COURT SUSTAINS LOVERS

Germany's Supreme Tribunal Nullifies Family Statutes.

Germany's supreme court has now, on final appeal, given judgment in favor of Count Erasmus Erbach, whose sensational marriage to Dora Fischer, an extremely pretty laundry girl, daughter of a washerwoman, created so great a sensation in Berlin that it has since and has led to a series of dozen duels and to the repeated arrest and committal of the count to insane asylums as a lunatic, until, after his last escape, he interested the Reichstag Deputy, Dr. Thaler, of Würzburg, in his behalf, and through him obtained from the Bavarian government a special order that the count should be protected from all further seizure and committal within the borders of the kingdom. Several previous committals in other parts of Germany had been obtained at the instance of the count's father, who was a member of the Reichstag, on the understanding that his son had not been in full possession of his reason when he wedded Dora Fischer. Eventually, however, the old count seems to have relented, and what contributed to this was the attitude of his younger brother, Arthur, who was anxious to succeed to the succession of the Erbachs, which are extremely valuable, for himself and for his own eldest son, Count Conrad Erbach. With this object in view, Arthur instituted a board of arbitration, composed of Prince Christian Stolberg, Prince Hermann Schönburg and Count William Solms, and submitted to them the argument that, inasmuch as Count Erasmus had married the laundress, Dora Fischer, without the consent of his father, and had contracted a mésalliance, in defiance of the family statutes and regulations of the mediæval or formerly petty sovereign house of Erbach, he must be deprived of all share or participation in the revenues of the entailed property and must be excluded from the count and succession. Now, Count Erasmus is the only child of the head of the family, who, while he has been ready to do everything he could to break off the match, had no intention of depriving his boy of his birthright for the sake of his brother or nephews. So he became the friend instead of the foe of the old count and his son, and his verdict, which relieved them of the bitter financial stress which they had undergone. This change of front on the part of the old count caused his brother and nephews to amend their complaint so as to embrace him within its provisions on the ground that by continuing to treat his son as a heir apparent, he had violated the family statutes which had been guilty of infraction of the latter, and was therefore unworthy to remain at the head of the family or in possession of the entailed estates.

The board of arbitration decided against the old count and his son, and its verdict was indorsed by the lower courts of law. The old count thereupon appealed, and the matter, having been carried from one tribunal to another, has now been decided in his favor and in that of his son by the supreme court of the German empire, at Leipzig. The latter court takes the very sensible ground that there is nothing in the entail of the vast Erbach estates relating to mésalliances or determining the conditions of marriage beyond requiring that each heir shall be of legitimate birth. The court likewise declares that neither it nor any other tribunal of the German Empire can be called upon to enforce regulations made by families of the higher or nobility for the discipline of their members, and that no judicial cognizance can be taken thereof. On this ground, therefore, it rejects the verdict of the court of arbitration, as well as the decisions of the lower courts, and restores a liberal allowance to Count Erasmus not debarred from the succession to the entailed property and from the chieftaincy of his house for having contracted a mésalliance. In fact, young Count Erasmus and his father have won a victory all along the line; and the next step to be taken will be to obtain a reversal of the entailed estate, and the marriage on the ground that it had been contracted when the count was insane, and in defiance of the laws of his house. Not until then will the laundry girl, Dora Fischer, become a full fledged serena highness, that being the predicate to which the head of the Erbach family and his wife, as well as their children, are entitled in Germany.

The decree of the supreme court is of wide reaching importance, extending far beyond the mere case of the Erbachs, for it practically reduces to nothing all those family statutes of the great houses of the German nobility, which have been in the past any number of instances where bourgeois wives of members of the great German nobility were debarred from sharing the titles and the honors of their husbands and excluded from all rights to his property on his death on the ground that he had contracted a mésalliance. The notable instance of the widow of Prince Louis Sayn-Wittgenstein, daughter of a leading merchant of Berlin, who after her husband's death was not only driven from his home and forced to surrender every vestige of his property, but was consigned to the authorities, to style herself Princess Sayn-Wittgenstein.

The decree of the supreme court of the empire knocks on the head once and for all time all these family statutes of the nobility, which are not in any sense of the word the law, but are merely a sort of moral or legislative sanction. If in future noble families wish to exclude the offspring of mésalliances from the inheritance of the family property they must bar the old entail and make a new settlement, restricting the succession to members of the family other than those who are considered to have married beneath. But henceforth none of the noble houses of Germany will have the right to prevent a woman, no matter what her birth, from sharing her husband's title on the ground that her marriage is contrary to the so-called family statutes, which have gone by the board.

Sir Alan Disappointed.

Usually the British Legation at Copenhagen has been the stepping stone to an embassy. But this is not the case with Gifford Pinchock's English brother-in-law, Sir Alan Johnstone, who, after having been prominently mentioned for the embassies of Vienna, Berlin, Constantinople and Rome, and even the United States, has now been obliged to content himself with a transfer to the legation at The Hague, having thus seen three of his juniors promoted over his head, namely, Sir Fairfax Cartwright, to the post of ambassador at Vienna; Sir James Rennell Rodd, as ambassador at Rome, and Charles Hardinge, in turn to the ambassadorship at St. Petersburg, and the ambassadorship of State for Foreign Under Secretary to the Viceroyalty of India, Affairs and to the House of Lords. Moreover, all these three juniors of Sir Alan have been appointed members of the Privy Council, a distinction which he has not until now been honored.

PLAYERS OFF FOR SYRACUSE.

Under the direction of Arthur Hammerstein, the "Nanny Marietta" company, of which Miss Emma Trentini is the star, and which opera will have its initial production at the Weating Opera House, at Syracuse, to-morrow evening, left here on a special train yesterday morning. In the party were Oscar Hammerstein, who composed the music, Victor Herbert, who composed the music, Mrs. Rida Johnson Young, who wrote the book, the hundred and sixty members of the company and orchestra, and Miss Trentini.

Daughter of Congressman Becomes Bride of Boston Man.

Philadelphia, Oct. 22.—The daughter of Philip's Episcopal Church, at Garrison, opposite West Point, was the scene of a wedding to-day, when Miss Emily Rosalind Fish, daughter of Congressman Hamilton Fish, became the wife of John H. Cutler, of Boston, but the storm did not dampen the ardor of the many guests. There were two special trains from New York bearing guests, and scores of automobiles with others. The bride was given away by her father, Elliott G. Cutler, a brother of the bridegroom, who was best man, and Miss Cutler was escorted by her father, George C. Cutler, Hamilton Fish, Jr., Sidney W. Fish, E. Morgan Gilbert, Fulton Cutting, F. Meredith Blagden, Louis A. Shaw, Francis M. Gurr, Monroe D. Robinson, Clarence L. Hay, George B. Wagstaff, Charles L. Appleton and F. S. von Stade. The bridesmaids were Miss Josephine Montgomery, Miss Helen J. Jessie Thompson, Helena Fish, Edith Deacon, Helene Coster, Elizabeth Cutting, Janetta Alexander and Katharine Tweed, all acting as bridesmaids.

The ceremony was performed by the rector of St. Philip's, the Rev. Mr. Chorley. The bride wore white satin and an old point lace veil with orange blossoms. In her hair was a diamond pendant. The two bridesmaids were dressed in white embroidered mousseline de soie trimmed with brown fur and Josephine Fish. They carried pink chrysanthemums. Among those of the New York guests were Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Mortimer, Mr. and Mrs. James Speyer, Mrs. Moses Taylor Campbell, Mr. and Mrs. Lucius Wilmerding, Mr. Henry Foster, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Rogers, Mr. Grenville Kane and daughter, Dorothy, Emlyn Roosevelt and Miss Ethel Roosevelt, daughter of Theodore Roosevelt. A reception followed the marriage at Glen Cliff, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fish, at Garrison.

Miss Fish is a sister of Mrs. William Lloyd, of New York. She came out three years ago. Her grandfather was Hamilton Fish, Governor of New York State and Secretary of State under President Grant. Mr. Cutler is a member of the old Cutler family at Boston and is one of the best known graduates of the Harvard University. He was graduated from Harvard in 1899 and was member of the winning football team of the year.

NOTES FROM TUXEDO PARK.

Tuxedo Park, Oct. 22.—The lawn tennis matches which have been under way this week were not finished to-day on account of the rain.
