

McCARREN'S PLAN BALKED

Doctors Hired to See Foelker at Albany Didn't Get Near Him.

REFUSED TO BE INTRUDERS

Testimony Before Investigators Infringes Attempt to Overwhelm Opponent of Ractracks.

The legislative investigating committee finished its work for the week yesterday at a short session in the morning, in which it went over the circumstances surrounding the alleged attempt to keep Senator Otto G. Foelker from recording his vote for the Agnew-Hart anti-racing bills in 1908.

Dr. Theodore P. Bailey and George T. Kelly, a lawyer, both of Albany, told the story of the last effort of Senator "Pat" McCarrren to take a hand in Foelker's intention to vote on the racing bills. Though neither of them could enlighten the committee on the workings of McCarrren's mind at that time, the inference seemed to be that the Brooklyn leader had intended to overwhelm Foelker with medical advice to keep to his sickbed until after the vote on the bills had been recorded.

Apart from that the most of the morning session was taken up in getting on the record of the inquiry the denials of Senators Charles H. Fuller and F. M. Carpenter concerning the remarks which Senator Eugene M. Travis credited them with at Friday's session.

As each of them had said after Friday's session, they had never told Travis that they had been "approached," using that word in its "invidious sense," as Senator Fuller termed it. Each of them had testified that no one had ever offered him any money for a vote against the bills.

Kelly Tells of McCarrren's Interest.

George T. Kelly, who was an Assemblyman from Albany from 1895 to 1901, took the stand to tell the committee about a call he made with Senator McCarrren on the morning of June 11, 1908, the day upon which the Agnew-Hart bills were finally passed through the special session in the Senate.

Kelly said he met McCarrren in a hotel entirely by accident and McCarrren asked him if he thought Dr. Bailey would examine Foelker. McCarrren told him, said Kelly, that a request had been made to him from some one in Brooklyn that he have Foelker examined by two reputable physicians, to see whether he was well enough to go to the Senate chamber for the vote.

"I went up with Senator McCarrren to see Dr. Bailey," said Kelly, "and there the Senator again explained, as he had to me, that he had been requested to get two reputable physicians to examine Foelker. Dr. Bailey explained that he was a physician, not a surgeon, and that probably what was wanted was a surgeon, and it ended by Dr. Bailey calling Dr. Elting, a surgeon of Albany, and arranging to meet Elting at Bailey's house in a few minutes."

Kelly explained here that Dr. Bailey, before making the arrangement with Dr. Elting, turned to Senator McCarrren, and said that he wanted to know first whether the matter was all on the square, explaining that as a reputable physician he didn't purpose to violate any professional ethics, and that, further, he didn't intend to get mixed up in any political deals. McCarrren reassured him on this point, Kelly said, and the interview ended when he and the Senator left the house and went toward the Capitol, while the two doctors rode away in Elting's automobile, bound for Foelker's house.

Judge Bruce tried to get from Kelly some idea as to why McCarrren had expressed doubt as to whether Dr. Bailey would make the examination of Foelker, but the Albany lawyer thought the doubt proceeded simply from the idea that Dr. Bailey was a busy man.

Foelker Got Up, So Plan Failed.
McCarrren had made no comment to him when they came out of Dr. Bailey's office after the interview, Kelly said, and it had been understood that he was to call up the doctor later, learn the result of the examination and report to McCarrren. As events turned out, however, Kelly did not call up Bailey, because Foelker came to the Senate chamber.

"What did McCarrren say when he saw Foelker brought into the chamber?" Judge Bruce wanted to know, but, unfortunately, Kelly had not been near enough to Senator McCarrren to hear his comment upon that surprising denouement.

Dr. Bailey's story practically substantiated the details of Kelly's, but in addition the doctor related the sequel to the story, when he and Dr. Elting approached the house in which Senator Foelker was lying ill, attended by Dr. Murphy, the physician who had accompanied him from Staatsburg.

McCarrren's reassurances to him, Dr. Bailey, in response to his challenge about the "squareness" of the whole matter, had been that Dr. Murphy himself requested the consultation.

"When Dr. Elting and I walked up the steps of the house, therefore," said Dr. Bailey, "I said to Dr. Murphy, who came to the door, that we were there because Senator McCarrren said that he, Dr. Murphy, and Senator Foelker had asked for a consultation."

Dr. Murphy told him quietly that there had been a mistake, because neither he nor Senator Foelker had asked for a consultation.

"I said, 'Good morning, then, doctor,' and turned away with Dr. Elting, and we left the house immediately, without even having gone inside the door."

It appeared from the testimony given by Kelly that Senator McCarrren had told him that some man was to meet the two Albany doctors at Foelker's house, and in the event of their report being that the Senator was too sick to come to the Senate chamber this man would prepare an affidavit for the doctors to sign. Kelly didn't recollect having heard this man's name mentioned, and neither did Dr. Bailey, though they agreed that McCarrren had made some reference to such an individual. His identity remained a mystery, however, because, as events turned out, there had been no need for his services.

Travis's Statements Denied.

Charles H. Fuller was the first witness of the short session. He was one of the Brooklyn Senatorial delegation in 1908 and voted for the anti-racing bills. In the testimony given by Senator Travis on Friday, that witness told the committee that it was his recollection that Senator Fuller had been one of the men who told him at the time that the fight on the bills was in progress that he had been approached with a money offer for his vote against the bills.

Mr. Fuller was emphatic in his denial, however, either that he had told Senator Travis any such thing or that any one at any time had ever approached him with any offer of improper influence, either by money or otherwise, on his vote on the racing bills or on any other measures during his terms at Albany.

F. M. Carpenter, who was in 1908 a Westchester Senator, and about whom Senator Travis told a similar story on Friday, was equally emphatic in his denial.

"I was not approached by any one," said Senator Carpenter. "I am not in the habit of telling falsehoods, and if I said it I certainly would have remembered it."

The hearing will be resumed on Tuesday morning, with Henry J. Keiser as the first witness. Keiser was cashier for Orlando Jones, the bookmaker, who testified on Friday.

Detectives employed by the committee are still hunting for James R. Keene, Harry Payne Whitney, Schuyler Parsons and David Mitchell with subpoenas, from which Judge Bruce hopes something definite will result in regard to the conference at Delmonico's, at which, it is alleged, the huge lobby fund of the racing interests was raised.

selves ready to provide for new subway construction. The proposition of McCaddoo was received generally with favor yesterday among city officials and others most closely concerned with the traction problem. Mr. McCaddoo expressed himself as hopeful that the city would accept his offer and said his company stood ready to fulfill its part of the proposition when the city fulfills the other part.

Rivalry Needed, Says Mr. McCaddoo.

"While I haven't much to add to the statement I have already made," he said, "as we believe the proposition advanced by our company covers practically every point, I want to emphasize the fact that our proposal affords a wholesome competition in the traffic situation. It is based on that more than anything else. I believe the local traction problem can never be worked out satisfactorily unless there is competition established between the various companies who should have the burden of operation."

Borough President McAneny agreed with Mr. McCaddoo in this regard. Board of Aldermen, said that Mr. McCaddoo's offer would have a beneficial influence on the traction problem whether it was accepted or not. Controller Prudden said that he considered the McCaddoo proposition much more advantageous than any made by the Interborough company and superior to the plan proposed by the Brooklyn Transit Conference. The door of competition had been opened and he hoped there would be more good offers made, he said.

William R. Wilcox, chairman of the Public Service Commission, said that the proposition was so important that it demanded and would receive thorough consideration from the commission. Asked whether the consideration of the McCaddoo proposition would delay action upon the bids for construction of the triborough route, he said that there would be no undue delay in sending the contracts to the Board of Estimate and Apportionment.

ONE VOTE FOR MRS. BELMONT

Some One at Recent Election Wanted Her for Lieutenant Governor.

Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont got one vote for Lieutenant Governor in the recent election. This fact came to light yesterday when the Board of Canvassers for New York County came to the tally sheets and returns of the 27th Assembly District. It turns that in the 11th Election District of this Assembly district one voter had written in the blank space in the Lieutenant Governor line the name of "Mrs. Alva E. Belmont."

The four election inspectors of the 24th Election District of the 15th Assembly District did not explain yesterday why they had credited Senator Alexander Brough with the total vote cast for Senator in their district. They got an adjournment until Tuesday, at 10:30 a. m.

MISSING GIRL COMES BACK

Daughter of Coal Dealer and Chauffeur Disappeared Six Months Ago.

Miss Maude Blaisdell, seventeen years old, has returned to her home, No. 264 Decatur street, Brooklyn. She disappeared on May 27. Her father, a millionaire, is a coal dealer and the president of the Standard Wood Company. Her brother, Bruce Blaisdell, offered $1,000 for knowledge of her whereabouts. She was found in San Jose, Cal.

With her, it is said, disappeared John T. Havens, a married man, who had been the chauffeur of the Blaisdell family. Before leaving her home Miss Blaisdell left a note which read: "I am going to Liverpool. I hope all will be forgiven. Mrs. Havens said that when her husband left home he took with him $5,000. The Havens formerly had lived at No. 122 Reid avenue, Brooklyn. Mrs. Havens now is living with friends in Manhattan."

THE WOLVERINE SAFE

Selkirk, Man., Nov. 19.—Part of the crew of the Northern Fish Company steamer Wolverine, which has been missing in Lake Winnipeg for three weeks, arrived in Selkirk today.

The big boat is safe at Swampy Harbor, one hundred miles north, surrounded by ice. About twenty passengers and the balance of the crew remain on board. They have an abundance of provisions. Dog trains will be sent after them.
