

New aids to ideal heating

The remarkable growth in popular favor of low-pressure Steam and Hot-Water heating have recently brought out greatly improved adjuncts to the heating outfit. Many a heating outfit now giving good service can be made to do much better.

NORWALL VACUUM VALVES

are about the cleverest of these new devices as they not only automatically vent the radiators of air, but when steam pressure ceases the air is automatically prevented from re-entering the radiators and piping.

Air is, of course, the enemy of heat—it must be expelled from the radiators before steam can circulate. The NORWALL valves let out the air and keep it out, and do this work steadily day and night like an automatic mechanical servant. Their use usually effects a fuel saving of 20 per cent or more.

sons who are trying to—the real word isn't pleasant to use. It is a very serious thing to be a worthy person and to know it, Little True Belief.

Santa Claus can't do all the giving. There was a time—but now there are so many children. So others must help a little.

When the time comes for you to help too, you will find it bitter-sweet. There will be so much you want to do, so little you can do; so many things to buy, so little to buy with.

In "the busy marts of trade," as they called them when they were poor and shabby, or the shops, as we now call the great, marvelous palaces, are gathered the wonders of men's making from everywhere. But you can't buy them all, even when you are quite grown up and have lots and oceans of money. So you will learn that it isn't the gift so much as what goes with it that is important. You will learn to think, Little Solomon Wise, of the kind of gift that will bear its own message, and if it be the right message, then that gift is best of all. You know how it is when Mother thinks out just what you wanted terribly and gives it to you before you ever have time to think about it yourself.

Mother always does that. She knows too what it means to receive a gift that one hasn't quite the courage to buy for oneself.

You will buy some things for smiles and laughter; for there can never be enough of either. You know, Barrie said that every time a baby smiles a flower is born. I'm sure he said something like that. If he didn't, he meant to say it; so it's just the same.

Maybe the time will come when you can't send a real gift at all, but only a remembrance, with a little of your inner self that may seem finer than the most splendid present. But it will be long before you have to think of these things—very, very, very long, I hope. But still—

But now Christmas is yours, all yours to accept without thinking, without responsibility. There couldn't be Christmas without you, Little Soul of All the World, and those like you; for only when we give as we do to children, with delight in the sacrifice to make them happy, without hope of return, do we truly celebrate Christmas.

Without thought of return? I am very wrong, Little Heart of Mine. We do think of the return, and it is always so much greater than the gift. When you place your arms about my neck, those soft, delicate arms that are stronger than anything in the world, and I can look through the blue windows into your pure soul that glows with the love that makes up your being, I can hear the chant of the seraphs, and while the majestic chorus swells I too may say, even though it be waveringly, haltingly, "Good will toward men!"
