

LATIN-AMERICANS PLAN MOVEMENT FOR PEACE

Common Constitution Binding All Central and South America Projected.

WILL GUARANTEE REFORMS

Then Employ International Force in Suppressing Revolts Against Authorities in Each Country.

The suggestion has been made for the enactment of a common constitution for all of the Latin-American countries and has been favorably received in several quarters where such a move would be of immediate interest and importance.

Stripped of its diplomatic verbiage, the proposition has for its purpose the abolition of revolutions in the countries of Latin America, to be accomplished by the creation of an international police.

It is planned to call a congress of the Latin-American republics to frame a common constitution, in other words, a constitutional congress whose work shall be recognized as binding on all the governments involved and in which each is to have a voice.

The common constitution, if framed according to the present plans of its advocates, would impose on each of the participating nations a free press, a Congress immune from executive domination, free judiciaries and the formation of political powers, all institutions heretofore unknown in some of the Latin American republics, the creation of which, it was figured, would lessen the present causes of internecine strife.

COMMITTEE IGNORED ADVICE

Their endeavor to aid the committee was evidently ignored, however, according to this paragraph from Mr. Binkerd's letter to Mr. Merritt: "Weeks ago your committee had on the stand the fathers of the most vicious traction legislation in bygone years. We requested your committee to take up some of these bills, particularly that so-called 'Metropolitan traction grab bill,' in considerable detail. In spite of this fact, however, scarcely a question was directed to revealing what made it possible for bills to be introduced and passed without a single word of explanation as to their purpose and effect."

Have you been warm outdoors the last few days? Perhaps your present Winter overcoat is not as heavy as your last one was.

There has been a tendency among clothiers gradually to cut down the weight of wool—in overcoats as well as suits.

We've never believed in that sort of economy. "Warmth without weight" sounds well, but except in cloths of certain rough fluffy textures it's a sad delusion.

Of course we have coats of these light but warm fluffy cloths. But since most men want more conservative cloths, most of our Winter coats are comfortably warm not only because they're all wool, but also because they contain enough weight of wool.

Between Imported Novelties and Domestic Comforts, we sure have an attractive lot of Xmas presents for men.

Smokers' articles; leather writing cases; shaving mirrors that stick on a window pane; Scotch knitted waistcoats—a hundred different things, each first rate of its kind.
