FOR 1,000-MILE FLIGHT

New York-Chicago Trip with Passenger, Atwood's Plan.

A. L. STEVENS COMPANION

Aviator to Start in Ten Days, Whether Prize Is Offered or Not, He Declares.

Harry N. Atwood, the aviator, who flew from Boston to Washington, with frills along the way, was in town for a few hours yesterday. Before departing by train for Atlantic City and Washington he announced that he would fly either from New York City to Chicago or from Chicago to New York, carrying A. Leo Stevens, the balloonist, as passenger, starting in about ten days. Atwood and Stevens have entered into a partnership, and will, he declares, carry off as many prizes as possible.

Atwood said at the Hotel Manhattan yesterday that he and Stevens had been searching the papers to try to discover some offers of money prizes for a passenger-carrying thousand-mile "cross-country" trip by aeroplane. He added that, surprising as it might appear when conditions in Europe were noted, they had not been successful in turning up a single offer of a prize.

"Mr. Stevens will be my passenger on the trip between New York and Chicago whether we get any money prize out of it or not," said Atwood. "But if some wealthy patron of aeronautics would care to dig down and put up some golden coin it would add spice to the undertaking."

"And say, when you look at it, doesn't it seem as if this country should be able to support some prizes for the world's passenger-carrying record by aeroplane?" "I have not made any false statements to date as to my flying intentions, so you may know that when I say I will fly with a passenger for one thousand miles, with or without financial inspiration, I will make good."

AFTER MELON, GETS SHOT

Police Hold Watchman on Complaint of Boy.

Eleven-year-old William Duffy, of No. 234 West 17th street, while loitering with several companions near a large tent in which watermelons were stored at Charlton street and the North River last evening, was shot in the right shoulder. It is said, by Jacob Schneider, of No. 1952 Second avenue, a watchman employed on the pier where the shooting occurred.

The boy was carried by his companions to a neighboring blacksmith shop and an ambulance was summoned from St. Vincent's Hospital. Dr. McGowan responded and declared the bullet wound was not serious and that the lad would be able to leave the institution in a few days.

Schneider denied having fired the shot, according to the detectives, and declared that he had no revolver. Despite this, he was positively identified, the police say, as the man who shot the boy by several of the victim's companions and later by the lad himself.

Schneider told the police the watermelons had been stored in the tent for several days. He said a number of youngsters had visited the tent lately, cut the strings that held the tent to the ground, and took some of the melons. He was warning them to keep away last night, he said, when he heard a revolver shot and saw the boy fall to the ground.

"COP" REPULSES ITALIANS

Attacked by Mob, He Pulls Revolver and Arrests Man.

Patrolman Gianni, of the Tremont station, was the storm centre of an angry mob of Italians at 18th street and Arthur avenue, The Bronx, yesterday morning. For a time he had been knocked down by one man, but the patrolman drew his revolver and kept the mob at bay. Then he went after his assailant and arrested him. It was necessary to call out the reserves to disperse the crowd, who had been celebrating the feast of Mount Carmel.

Gianni had been assigned to keep order during the celebration, and a group of Italians stood in the corner and insisted upon being served. Giuseppe Mastodomenico, of No. 255 East 131st street, defied him. When the patrolman tried to shove the Italian away from the man punched him in the face, knocking him down.

Seeing this, the other celebrants closed in on Gianni, who drew his revolver. He held the crowd at bay for several minutes, and then went after Mastodomenico, who had run into a grocery store. Gianni found him and pulled him out. When he was taken to the station, he was arraigned in the Morrisani court. Mastodomenico is an Italian in $300 bonds to keep the peace for six months.

The Musical Value

Of A Player-Piano

Is Determined

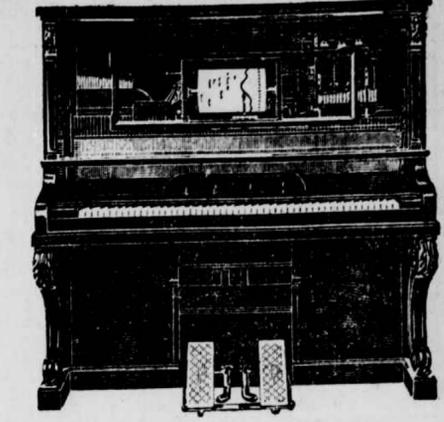

By The Player-Action

It Contains

It frequently happens that many people have a decided preference in favor of some particular 'make' of piano. They are not unlikely to let this influence them in choosing a player-piano, but they can make no greater mistake than to make a selection on the strength of the name of the piano alone. When you buy a player-piano in reality you buy two things.

The Piano—and the Ability to Play It

No matter how good the piano may be, the music will be no better than the player contained in the piano can make it. You should consider the piano—but you should consider first the player-action. It is the player which makes the piano of value to you. It is the player which either gives you, or fails to give you, the power to play in a manner to give genuine pleasure to yourself and others. It is a fact that there is but one player-action that has received serious musical recognition from the highest authorities, such as Paderewski, Strauss, Josef Hofmann, Moszkowski, Rosenthal, Debussy and a hundred other of the greatest living composers, pianists and teachers—That is

The Pianola

Their expert opinions are on record to the effect that the Pianola is the one player with which satisfactory feeling and expression can be given to the music. You may verify The Steinway, The Weber, The Steck, The Wheelock, The Stuyvesant You are invited not only to hear these superb Pianola Pianos, but to play them yourself. You will find you can do so after a few moments of instruction.
