

MAYOR KILLS PLAN TO BETTER 34TH ST.

New Yorkers Used to Walking Up and Down Stairways, He Says, and Can Keep Doing It.

DOESN'T SEE GAIN, ANYWAY

Burdens to Real Estate Owners His Main Reason for Refusing Consent and Opposing All Others in Estimate Board.

Mayor Gaynor yesterday killed the proposition to move the entrance to the Park Avenue tunnel from 33d street to 34th street and lower the grade of 34th street so it would cross Fourth Avenue on the level.

In his memorandum vetoing the proposition the Mayor said: "I have been opposed to this change all along, but was very desirous of giving assent thereto in order to be in harmony with the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, but on serious reflection I am convinced that I should not do so."

Literature of Park Avenue.

Giving his reasons in complete form for vetoing the plan, the Mayor said: "The continuation of Fourth Avenue from 34th street to 42d street is called Park Avenue."

The tunnel was formerly an open cut, but was covered over, and a park fifty feet wide was laid out through the center of Park Avenue from 34th street to 40th street over this tunnel.

"It was laid out by the Common Council in 1851, sanctioned by the Legislature, which provided funds for it, and has continued a park ever since."

"The owners of the property in each case will be entitled to damages for the change of grade. And then the ripping out of the park in the center of the street between 34th and 36th streets will obviously damage the property on each side of Park Avenue."

"All over the city we go up and down flights of steps, to and from the subways and overhead roads and we think nothing of it. The other alleged gain is that we will have Fourth Avenue entirely surfaced over and in use between 34th street and 33d street, instead of having the cut which is there now approaching the tunnel. I do not see that this amounts to much."

Granddaughter of Mrs. F. Butterfield Gets $883,431 Interest in Estate.

Miss Dorothea B. Smith, daughter of the late Ballard Smith, a newspaper editor, will have an interest amounting to $883,431 in the estate of her grandmother, Mrs. Caroline F. Butterfield.

The appraisal filed yesterday in the Surrogate's Court shows that Miss Smith is also entitled to a residuary estate valued at $42,311, and remainder interest in life estates amounting to $141,120.

But to enjoy this fortune Miss Smith must obey this injunction in the will of her grandmother: "Should my granddaughter Dorothea ever marry any son of Eleanor Phelps McKaegan, now widow of Henry Sedley, my said granddaughter shall thereby forfeit and lose all estate and interest of every description under this will, and upon the contracting of such marriage I give all my funds and property thereto held in trust for her in equal shares to and among the corporations and persons named in the sixteenth section of this will."

MISS DANA OUTDOES KIN

Marriage of Poet's Granddaughter Eugenic and Ethical.

Boston, June 26.—Miss Della Farley Dana, granddaughter of the poet Dana, granddaughter of the poet Dana, granddaughter of the poet Dana, was Henry Woodworth Longfellow, was married in the open air by a justice of the peace this afternoon to Robert E. Hutchison, of Philadelphia, at Dana Beach, the Dana summer home at Manchester-by-the-Sea.

Besides being an ethical marriage, for which the Dana family is famous, it was the first eugenic marriage in this state. Just a year and a week ago a "ethical" bride's brother, Edmund Trowbridge Dana, was married in a similar manner to Miss Jessie Holliday, an English painter.

MRS. MACKAY NOT TOLD OF CHILDREN

Admits She Had No Idea Her Husband Intended Taking Them Out of the United States.

SEES LAWYER, THEN TALKS

Denies Effort Was Made to Serve Millionaire or That She Has Been Served with Legal Documents in Any Kind of Suit.

Mrs. Clarence H. Mackay, whose husband and three children sailed on board the Imperator for Hamburg Wednesday, without the knowledge of Mrs. Mackay, after spending the day in New York, returned to her home at Roslyn, Long Island, at sundown last night.

Shows Traces of Worry.

She was dressed in a tailor made suit, black velvet shoes, and a big black picture hat.

"Mrs. Mackay," began the reporter, "rumors of a lawsuit."

"I can't say anything about it," she interrupted.

But the sudden departure to Europe of her husband and her children, Ellen, Katherine and John William, was a subject she would discuss.

"I did not know anything about their sailing until informed of it by newspaper men," said Mrs. Mackay. "I was totally unaware that Mr. Mackay contemplated any such thing. The entire affair came as an absolute surprise to me. Mr. Mackay did not make me acquainted with his plans, and I am still at a loss to understand them."

Denies With Flushed Face.

This brought a flush to Mrs. Mackay's face, and with all the firmness at her command, she replied:

"I deny most emphatically having had any writ or papers of any kind served on Mr. Mackay, or of having had any intention of doing so. I also deny that any papers of any kind have been served on me."

Mrs. Mackay started up the steps, and as she reached the door, in answer to another question, said:

"You must understand that it would be utterly impossible for me to discuss these things. Any statement which might be made must come from Mr. Taft."

Mrs. Mackay was reminded that earlier in the afternoon, when a statement was sought at her counsel's office, John F. Charlton, of Mr. Taft's office, was quoted as having said:

"In any lawsuit the practice of this office is never to issue a statement."

Mrs. Mackay laughed and said: "You'll have to form your own opinion as to what that meant."

The return of Mrs. Mackay to Harbor Hill set at rest a rumor that she had followed her husband to Europe, sailing on the French liner France, which left her dock a little before noon. But it did not lay the gossip that has been rife in Roslyn, in New York, in Spring Lake and other places where the Mackays are well known.

This gossip sought to connect the sailing of Mr. Mackay and his three children with the surrendering last February of Mrs. Mackay's dower rights in the Harbor Hill estate.

Mrs. Mackay's interest in the property now is nominal. She may live there, or, in the event of its being rented, the rentals are to accrue to her until her son comes of age, when title will be vested in him.

HELEN M'CARTHY FOUND IN PARK

Wandering Aimlessly Along a Fort Washington Walk When Discovered—Had Been Missing Two Days.

SOUGHT WORK AS NURSE

Slept on Bench and Lived on Few Cakes She Bought at a Candy Store—Denies Identity at First, but Collapses at Sight of Her Father.

Helen McCarthy, the sixteen-year-old daughter of John A. McCarthy, an advertising agent, living at the Hotel Hargrave, missing from her home since Tuesday morning, was found yesterday afternoon wandering about in a bewildered condition in Fort Washington Park near 175th street.

Collapses When Father Comes.

Not satisfied that she was telling the truth, they called Patrolman Richard Holt, a mounted policeman attached to the 175th street and St. Nicholas Avenue station, but she still continued to deny her identity.

Although the mystery of her disappearance was solved, the police up to late last night were not able to satisfy themselves as to all her experiences, nor as to just what was behind her running away from home.

"After my quarrel Tuesday morning with you and mamma, I went to Central Park and sat there all morning by the lake. I thought how much better it was than going to school, as you said I would have to do. When noon-time came I got hungry and went to the East Side somewhere and bought a 20-cent lunch out of the $2 I had saved and had with me."

Sought Work as Nurse Girl.

"When afternoon came I thought I would have to get work if I was to stay away from home to support myself. At first I thought of stinking in the streets, and that people would give me money, but I was afraid of the crowds, and gave that up. Then I saw the nurse girls and the girls selling papers at the news stands, and thought I would like to be like one of them. I asked at a number of houses for work, but everybody turned me away, and when I went at the news stands they all laughed at me."

"When night came I thought of finding some place to sleep, and remembered that Mr. and Mrs. Clark lived up on St. Nicholas Avenue, and that they would take me in. I went to their house, but nobody was home. I saw a lot of buildings with lights and went down a long flight of steps and sat by them awhile, and then I went to Riverside Drive and sat there where it curves out. Finally every one went home, and I was left there all alone. I slept on a bench that night—it was Tuesday night, I think."

Was Lost in Park.

"When I woke up the sun was up. I was lost, and did not know where I was or how to get home, so walked along Riverside Drive until I came to a park with a lot of trees. I did not know where it was. I found a spring and washed myself there. Then I went to a candy store and bought some cakes and went back to the trees and ate them."

"I stayed there among the trees all that day, and slept there Wednesday night near an old building. I stayed there all day to-day until the two men found me and called the policeman."

"The quarrel she speaks of," said her father last night, "took place Tuesday morning, when I told her to go to the telephone and order a small steak for us down in the dining room. She got to the telephone and after the man downstairs answered, she wouldn't give him the order, saying she couldn't say it. She gets confused when she goes to the telephone, and I determined to take it out of her. I went to her and shook her by the arm, thinking I could force her to say what I had told her."

"She grew stubborn and moody and apparently brooded over it. Then we all went downstairs and had breakfast. There we discussed another matter on which I had some trouble with her the day before. For that I had told her she had to stop her singing lessons, and go to school. I had made up my mind to send her to the Groff School, in 75th street. They have classes there for children who are mentally defective."

WALL STREET PLOT, SAYS LAUTERBACH OF LOVETT STORY

New Yorker Lays Charges to Conspiracy Against Him Because of His Friendship for Lamar.

DENIES DOING ANY WRONG

A. Mitchell Palmer Tells Startling Story of Being Impersonated to Ledyard, Who Also Said Lauterbach Had Approached Him.

USED "HIGHER UP" NAMES

Lobby Investigators Hear That Somebody Assured Financiers Speaker Clark and Other Party Leaders Could Be "Influenced" by Right Man.

Washington, June 26.—Edward Lauterbach, well known New York lawyer, was a witness before the Senate lobby investigating committee to-night, following a series of sensations and indirect accusations against which he sought to defend himself.

The stage was set for the startling incidents by the testimony of Representative Daniel J. Riordan, of New York, who denied that he had urged Judge Lovett over the telephone to retain Lauterbach in the Union Pacific dissolution case, and of Representative A. Mitchell Palmer, of Pennsylvania, who detailed an experience in which he was impersonated to Lewis Cass Ledyard, an attorney representing the Morgan interests.

Adding to the sensational turn taken by the trail of the "insidious lobby," Senator Reed, a member of the investigating committee, and Mr. Riordan criticized Judge Lovett for making the statement he did last night involving the name of Mr. Riordan without having made inquiry as to the truth of his assertions.

Senator Reed suggested that Judge Lovett was not "very discreet or careful," ignoring the fact that Judge Lovett had said he did not believe the man who talked to him by telephone was Riordan.

Mr. Palmer took the witness stand after Mr. Riordan had made an emphatic denial that he ever telephoned to Judge Lovett or even knew him. Mr. Riordan said he only knew Lauterbach by sight and never met him until to-night. The Pennsylvania Representative explained that he wished to lay before the committee an experience similar to the one which had embarrassed Mr. Riordan, in order that the practice might be shown not to be unusual.

Palmer Tells His Experience.

Mr. Palmer said that early in February, while at Stroudsburg, Penn., he received a telephone message from Mr. Ledyard, then in New York, and that the latter, much to his surprise, informed him that he wished to talk with him further about legislative matters in Washington. He soon learned, Mr. Palmer said, that he had been impersonated and Mr. Ledyard came to the same conclusion, with the result that Mr. Ledyard determined to hold further telephone conversations with the "mythical Palmer" and have shorthand notes taken.

In describing his telephone talk with Mr. Ledyard, Mr. Palmer said: "Early in February last, while I was at my home in Pennsylvania, I was called to the telephone to answer what my clerk said was a call from New York. A voice at the other end of the wire said, 'This is Mr. Ledyard.'"

"I said, 'Who?'" "He said, 'Mr. Ledyard.'"

"I told him, 'Spell it.'"

"He spelled his name and said he was Lewis Cass Ledyard, and added, 'You ought to know, for you have been talking with me over the telephone.'"

"I said: 'You are very much mistaken, Mr. Ledyard. I have never seen you; I have never spoken to you, directly or over the telephone, or had any communication with you. You will have to explain yourself a little further.'"

"He then went on to say that if that was true there was a very strange and remarkable conspiracy afoot, in which my name had been used, and he then went on to tell me what was to me a very amazing story."

"He said that he had been called on the telephone a short time before that by a gentleman who, after some hesitation about giving his name, saying that he was a Representative in Congress, finally said he was Representative Palmer, of Pennsylvania, and this person told Mr. Ledyard that he was in a position, by reason of his membership in the House and his relation with prominent members of the House, to be of service to interests which Mr. Ledyard represented, even going so far as to say, as I recall it, that he thought the 'money trust' investigation report could be controlled, that various investigations then proceeding, both in Congress and in the courts, affecting large financial interests in New York City, could be satisfactorily adjusted, machines."

ROMANCES REVEALED BY CROCKER LAND TRIP

Wireless Expert Weds Childhood Sweetheart, Who Came to Say "Goodby."

TWO OTHERS ARE ENGAGED

W. Elmer Ekblaw and Maurice C. Tanquary Admit They're to Marry College Mates on Their Return.

The sailing of the good ship Diana on July 2 with the museum party in quest of the Crocker Land will mark a turning point in three romances.

Two began in the University of Iowa, the third, according to Jerome Lee Allen, one of the principals, started in a Baptist churchyard in Maquoketa, Iowa, over ten years ago.

As the little vessel steams away on her journey to the north she will leave behind Miss Josephine Perry and Miss Augusta Krieger and bear away Maurice C. Tanquary and W. Elmer Ekblaw, to whom they became engaged last month, and who are to do much of the scientific work of the expedition.

The Diana will also leave behind Mrs. Allen, bride of a month and still a junior at the University of Iowa.

Mr. Allen, who is the wireless expert of the exploring party, described the course of his romance to a Tribune reporter at his home at No. 165 Washington Park, Brooklyn, last night. But he and his bride faced the prospect of long absence from each other with calm philosophy.

"As I'm the wireless operator, it won't be so very much of a parting," he said with a chuckle, "but still three years is pretty long. You see, I first met Mrs. Allen ten years ago. I was eleven then and three little girls had waylaid me while I was walking through a Baptist churchyard. They wanted some candy I had."

"I put up a pretty good fight, but it was no use, and I'd have got the worst of it if Mrs. Allen, who was then ten, hadn't jumped over the fence and helped me. I was so grateful that I gave her most of the candy, and swore—if one can swear at that age—that I'd never be satisfied till I'd got her. And finally I did. When we were first engaged? Well, I don't exactly know; at least I don't know when Victoria was first engaged; but I know I was first engaged when she saved my candy."

The bride, who was Victoria Clark, came East from college early this month to bid goodby to Mr. Allen, who went to Washington to meet her. After a day or two the thought of the coming parting became too dreadful, so the couple hid them to Borough Hall, Brooklyn, and got a license, and on Friday, June 13, were married in the Lenox Road Baptist Church. Only then did they notify the folks at home, and not until yesterday did the facts become known here.

Mrs. Allen said that their decision to marry was very sudden.

"We thought we would be happier if we parted married than merely engaged," she said.

Mr. Ekblaw and Miss Krieger were both of the class of '10 at the University of Illinois; their engagement

PURSUE GIRL HELD FOR $25,000 RANSOM

Detectives in "Cross-State Auto Chase After Machine Containing Lena Navock.

HELD BY RELATIVES 8 YEARS

Father, a South American Millionaire, Seeks to Recover Daughter—Traced to Weedsport.

[By Telegraph to The Tribune.]

Syracuse, N. Y., June 26.—Smuggled out of a rear cellar door while detectives employed by C. and H. A. Kapit, of New York, attorneys for her father, closely watched the front of the residence, Miss Lena Navock, seventeen years old, again disappeared to-night just at the moment the detectives were congratulating themselves on locating the girl, who is said to have been held for ransom by relatives for the last eight years.

The girl, who is the daughter of Solomon Navock, formerly of New York, and now a millionaire merchant of Argentina, was trailed here to-day by detectives after a chase across the state from New York to Watertown, whence she is believed to have been brought here.

According to detectives she has been living in a West Genesee rooming house under close confinement since last week, unaware of the search being made for her. Premature announcement of her discovery warned her captors, members of her stepmother's family, who removed her late this afternoon from the rooming house, fifteen minutes before the detectives entered in search of her.

The escaping party entered a racing automobile and left here in the direction of Rochester. The detectives in another machine were in close pursuit, and traced the flying party as far as Weedsport, twenty-two miles from here. The girl's captors are said to have placed her ransom at $25,000.

About eight years ago Solomon Navock was separated from his second wife. In the agreement signed by both was the stipulation with the woman that the daughter, then a child of eight, should be placed in the custody of Israel Navock, a resident of New York. At that time the girl was in Watertown, where she lived with her stepmother's brother.

The detectives allege that the relatives, realizing that the father was in South America, hid the girl, and have steadily refused to disclose her whereabouts unless paid a ransom for her return.
