

Where Grim War Is the Theme

This striking photograph gives an intimate view of a battery of Servian heavy artillery which is holding a position on the Austrian-Servian frontier. The photo was taken during a noonday lull in an artillery duel which stretched over several weeks.
