Financiers Friendly to Germany Believe Politics Will Force Break.

SALES FLOOD MARKET IN EARLY TRADING

Bargain Hunters Start Rally and Active Stocks Close with Strong Gains.

The action of yesterday's stock market indicated belief that there would be no break with Germany over the reply to the Administration's note on submarine warfare as it has been conducted by the Teutonic allies.

In other banking quarters, however, particularly those with inclinations favorable to Germany, a feeling of pessimism prevailed.

Thinks Break Will Come.

The head of a prominent Wall Street trust company put things this way: "Assuming that the text of the German note as received by the State Department will not be materially changed from the version in today's papers, my guess would be that it will lead to a severing of diplomatic relations with Germany."

The president of a big national bank carefully avoided the term "a break in diplomatic relations." He tendered the view that the present German note would not lead to war.

An international banker of first importance said the German note furnished another excellent example of that nation's moral obtuseness.

German Obtuseness Shown.

An international banker of first importance said the German note furnished another excellent example of that nation's moral obtuseness. He referred particularly to those paragraphs alluding to Great Britain's blockade of the world's ports.

Uncle Sam Neutral.

"But we should remember in this serious crisis that if peace is to be maintained the German note must provide acceptable measures to the American people as well as to the German people."

German Note a Triumph For International Law

Professor Stowell Thinks an Honest Neutrality Bids Us Accept, but He Would Rather We Joined the Allies Than See Germany Victorious.

Professor Ellery C. Stowell, professor of international law at Columbia, made this comment last night on the German note.

"The German government, guided by this idea, notifies the government of the United States that German naval forces have received the following orders: 'In accordance with the general principles of visit, search and destruction of merchant vessels recognized by international law, such vessels, both within and without the area declared to be a naval war zone, shall not be sunk without warning, without saving human lives, unless the ships attempt to escape or offer resistance.'"

"Putting a fair and reasonable interpretation upon this statement, we may understand it to mean that the German government promises the United States that it will observe the recognized principles of international law governing visit, search and the destruction of merchant vessels, whether the vessels be passenger liners or freighters, whether they be neutral or enemy and whether they be found within the war zone surrounding the British Isles or in any other part of the high seas."

No Reason for Break Now.

"In the concluding paragraphs of Secretary Lansing's note of April 19 he made the statement that if it is the policy of the United States to prosecute relentless and indiscriminate warfare against vessels of commerce by the use of submarines without regard to what the government of the United States must consider her sacred and indisputable rights of international law, and the universally recognized dictates of humanity, the government of the United States is at last forced to the conclusion that there is no reason for a break with Germany."

Prepared to Disavow Sussex Attack.

"In regard to the matter of the Sussex the German government probably admits its mistake and has prepared the way for a full disavowal and punishment of those responsible for the mistake."

Third Degree Methods Used.

Later Daech's said that the admissions he made to the president and the cabinet were made to him by third-degree methods. Similar testimony was given by Scholz and Fay.
