GIRLS PROVE 'O.O.' WINSOME RASCAL

Deft with Pen Was Cute Oliver Osborne, Notes in Court Show.

HELD INDOOR RECORD FOR SPEED WOOLING

Witness After Witness Sighs Over His Aliases—Broker Repeats Rae Tanzer's Words.

Numerous women showed numerous letters yesterday at the trial of Rae Tanzer in the United States District Court. And this display, plus usual legal pyrotechnics between Benjamin Slade, counsel for Miss Tanzer, and William Rand, jr., special counsel for the government, was the feature of the day.

First came Miss Blanche Ungar, who said she had met an Oliver Osborne while she was employed in a Third Avenue department store. Now, Mr. Slade did not like the mention of that mysterious Oliver Osborne. He contended that her testimony was invalid in view of the recent ruling of the Court of Appeals, which classified all "Oliver Osborne testimony" in the Safford case as hearsay and illegal.

Letters and Letters Appear.

Over his objections, however, Helen Kaiser said she had met Oliver Osborne, and, as Miss Ungar had, showed letters from him. Then Catherine Mackenheimer, of 2216 Eighth Avenue, put in evidence letters she had received from a man she said was named McDonald. Mrs. Ethel Brooks, heavily veiled, next identified letters which she said had been sent to her by a man who signed himself "Mason Nye." And Mrs. Stewart Denham, of 161 East Sixtieth Street, identified some writing as that of a man who had boarded in her house. Mr. Slade continued to object, and none of these witnesses was cross-examined.

The letters were then turned over to Loren C. Horton, of East Orange, a handwriting expert. "All of them," said he, "were written by the same man who registered in the Hotel Kensington as Oliver Osborne and by the same man who wrote the missives Miss Tanzer declares she received from James W. Osborne." The jury took a look at some of the letters.

More evidence was brought up by the government to prove that James W. Osborne was in the Bar Association on October 18, 1914, the date the defendant claims she was in a hotel in Plainfield, N. J., with Mr. Osborne. Employees of the Bar Association testified that Mr. Osborne had hired a room there on October 18. Records, bills and books were produced.

No Blackmailer, Girl Said.

William Hawley, a broker, of 419 West End Avenue, and a friend of Osborne's for twenty-five years, told of going in company with a policeman to the place where the defendant was employed. "What do you want from Mr. Osborne?" he says he asked Miss Tanzer. "I'm not a blackmailer. I don't want his money," was her reply. Mr. Hawley said. The witness asked her to call at Mr. Osborne's office. Mr. Slade wanted to know how tall the witness was. "I weigh 190 pounds, have blue eyes, am five feet eight inches tall, have a dimple in my chin and a straight nose," was the answer. Except in regard to height, this description tallies with that of the mysterious Oliver Osborne. The first time the defendant has appeared interested in the case during the cross-examination of Mr. Hawley.

SENIOR'S SUMMER SUIT IS ALL PEEK-A-BOOS

Coat Riddled with Holes for Zephyrs to Amble Through.

There was a politely suppressed but distinctly audible gasp of surprise in the lobby of the Hotel Majestic yesterday as Senior Juan Gorgezes stepped from the hotel elevator with several other guests. Another gasp escaped from those standing about the lobby as the Cuban turned and sauntered across the room, exposing his back to view.

The exclamations were an otherwise unspoken tribute to the decidedly sumnerish costume in which Senior Gorgezes was attired. The senior's manly chest and back were ornamented like the top of a cranberry pie or the sides of a latticed Italian garden. It was, he later explained, a sandal suit, consisting of elbow sleeves and numerous openings in front and back to permit the passage of air, also a generous view of his pink and green striped silk shirt.

"Neat but not gaudy," he explained. But Fifth Avenue promenaders may decide that for themselves when it appears there within the next day or so.

33 FIREMEN PROMOTED; 85 ADDED TO FORCE

Changes Made on Civil Service Standing, Says Adamson.

New York's fire department was materially strengthened yesterday by the promotion of thirty-three members and the appointment of eighty-five men. To show that the day of political pull and favoritism is past, Commissioner Adamson said that every one of the promotions was made in numerical order from the lists provided by the civil service department.

One of the features of the changes that will follow yesterday's promotions and additions will be sending more men to the districts that embrace the city's summer populations. Rockaway Beach has been named as one of the spots that will benefit.

Four captains appointed were: John J. Waldron, Clarenceville, L. I.; William Berenssen, Maspeth, L. I.; Hugh J. Joyce, Brooklyn; Joseph O. Hanlon, Brooklyn.

Six lieutenants appointed were: William J. Breen, Brooklyn; James F. Roche, The Bronx; William H. Stack, Albert Orth, Walter J. Dugan, Elmhurst, L. I.; George McNair, Glendale, L. I.

Crushed Against Post by Truck. Henry Meyer, of 336 Broadway, Williamsburg, was killed yesterday when a motor truck a chauffeur was cranking, suddenly started and ran into him. He was thrown against a post and his head was crushed.

Literally thousands of people have asked us: "How can it be done?"

—Only by placing with the publishers of the Britannica the largest order for books ever given in the United States or perhaps in the world, permitting of huge economies in the manufacture; and then by re-selling these to the public on a very small margin.

Now the publishers notify us that on account of the drastic rise in prices they cannot supply any more sets save at a heavy advance in cost. So we in turn must notify the public that it will have to pay from $11 to $19 more per set, according to binding, after tomorrow night when the present sale closes.
