Venezelos Believes America in War Means Free World

Democratic Nations Will Attain Peace Ideals, Says Greek Leader

Change in Russia Is Hailed with Joy

Attempt to Establish "Divine Right" in Greece "Doomed to Failure"

The Tribune has received the following statement from M. Venezelos, President of the Greek Provisional Government, in reply to a request for an expression of his views on the effect of the Russian revolution and America's entrance into the war on the national affairs of Greece. (If the Allies decide to ratify King Constantine and the Provisional Government of Salonica in control of Greece, M. Venezelos would probably become the President of the Greek Republic.)

By ELEUTHERIOS VENIZELOS (The Case in The Tribune)

Salonica, April 14.—The change that has taken place in the Russian government has been hailed by the new Greece with sincere joy, because the abolition of despotism and the triumph of democratic principles in Russia give in the most conclusive manner that the struggle now going on in the world is essentially a contest between democracy and autocracy.

The entrance into the war of the great American Republic is the most emphatic confirmation possible of the nature of the world conflict. The struggle of the Greek liberal forces against King Constantine's clique has never been a fight between people favoring war and those who favor peace, but it is a struggle of democracy against autocracy. No party wished for a prolonged period of peace more than the liberals, especially after the situation resulting from the two recent Balkan wars.

Sympathies With the Entente

Because of the democratic sentiments of the country, however, as well as an amount of the bonds of gratitude and common interests existing between the powers that guarantee Greek safety and constitution in the eastern Mediterranean, and also because of our alliance with Serbia, all our sympathies were from the beginning of the war with the Entente Powers. Moreover, we were firmly convinced that the developments of the great struggle would, sooner or later, make our intervention inevitable on account of our treaty with Serbia.

In this connection we were strengthened after Turkey, which never recognized our sovereignty over the isles of the archipelago, and which never ceased to proclaim plainly that she would go as far as a war declaration in order to take possession of them, had entered into the war on the side of the Central Powers.

There never was any doubt in our minds that the world war was our own war and that it was incumbent upon us to enter into it at the first opportunity, binding our destiny with those of our friends and of our Serbian ally, in order to contribute to the triumph of the Entente and to secure, in the remaking of the map of Europe, the necessary protection for the legitimate interests of Hellenism.

King in Pact with Germany

Opposed to this policy was that of the King, who claimed that we should maintain our neutrality until the moment of our victory over Serbia. Had the policy of the King been sincere it would have been entirely honorable. But, as events afterward demonstrated, his policy lacked sincerity. Under the policy of neutrality that policy meant the loss of Greece, which would have been the result of the two Balkan wars.

But in reality his policy was due to a secret pact with Germany and had as other purpose than promoting the victory of Germany, because the triumph of Prussiaism, in the King's opinion, was the only possible opportunity for him to impose on Greece an absolute monarchy.

We have proof of this. When Bulgaria attacked Serbia the crown immediately took a position conflicting with that of the majority of the new Parliament, refusing to fulfill the obligations contracted by our alliance with Serbia and thus opposing the will of the entire country as expressed through the recent election. The King told me at that time that he did not consider himself bound to abide by the wishes of the people. He said that whenever an important international matter came up for decision he reserved the right to impose upon the nation his personal viewpoint, claiming that he was responsible to God only.

"Divine Right" Doomed to Failure

It is quite obvious that such an attempt to establish in Greece the principle of monarchy by divine right is doomed to failure at a time when that very principle is abolished in Russia.

Furthermore, the victory over Prussiaism, the triumph of democracy, which will be more decisive and more complete now, owing to the immense material and moral resources thrown in the balance by the great American Republic, will not only result in the shattering failure of the attempt made by King Constantine, but, we believe and hope, will also demolish in Germany, in its very foundations, the antiquated institution of autocracy, which is incompatible with modern civilization and with the ideals that gave birth to the great North American Republic.

Allow me to add that the entrance of the United States into the war against the Central Powers and the noble words uttered by the President in Congress make it certain for us that the peace that will follow the victory will give birth to a new political system in which the right of self-government will be guaranteed to every people. The league of democratic nations will attain the ideal of universal peace and eradicate forever the despotic agency now ravaging humanity.
