

Rintelen Makes More Disclosures; Trial On To-day

Officials Told Lamar and Others Got Thousands by Misrepresentation

Millions Spent Here

Names on Payroll of Kaiser's Friend Believed to Have Been Revealed

Captain Franz Rintelen spent a second day yesterday in conference with naval officials. He admitted frankly that he had spent millions in German propaganda work in this country, and declared that David Lamar and some of the members of Labor's National Peace Council, indicted with him, had obtained from him hundreds of thousands of dollars by pretending they had brought about munition strikes which were the outgrowth of labor disputes.

Rintelen may tell these things under oath at his trial, which starts to-day before Judge E. E. Cushman, in the United States Circuit Court. All the chief figures in Labor's National Peace Council will be present, most of them, the Rintelen, as defendants. These include Lamar, who arrived from Atlanta yesterday; Frank Buchanan and E. Robert Fowler, of Chicago, former members of the House of Representatives; Frank S. Monnett, former Attorney General of Ohio, and others. The government, however, will not name Rintelen as its witness. This was announced by one connected with the prosecution after the German naval officer had pleaded not guilty yesterday to the indictment charging him and others with conspiring to prevent the manufacture and shipment of munitions to the Allies by fomenting strikes. But it is expected that Rintelen will not only defend himself but also will tell what he knows of the names of German agents who were on his payroll while he was in this country in the first few months of the war.

Liner Prinzess Irene Towed to Navy Yard

The North German Lloyd liner Prinzess Irene, weather-worn and shabby, was towed yesterday from the company's docks in Hoboken to the navy yard in Brooklyn. Nearly a foot of sea growth, taken on during her long sojourn in Hoboken, will be removed, and by the time her hull is cleaned her damaged engines will have been repaired and the vessel made ready for service.

She is the first of the seized vessels to go to the navy yard, and it is assumed that she is the least damaged, except the Vaterland. The Hamburg-American No. 2, the most powerful tug in the harbor, aided in taking the ship from Hoboken to Brooklyn. This tug, which was built especially to assist in docking the Emperor and Vaterland, was seized with the Hamburg-American fleet.

The Prinzess Irene, the König Albert and the Berlin were the popular Mediterranean passenger carriers of the North German Lloyd Line. It is doubtful if any of the thousands of persons who traveled on the Irene would have recognized her yesterday as she moved out into the stream. Two freighters of the Hamburg-American Line, the Pisa and Nassovia, were taken to the yards of Tietgen & Lang, in Hoboken, and several others are expected soon to undergo an overhauling at dry docks in South Brooklyn. The Prinzess Irene, which was built in Stettin in 1900, is a twin screw vessel of 10,881 tons gross; is 524 feet long and has a beam of 60 feet.

Eddystone Plant Inspectors May Be Involved in Plot

Russians Disapproved of Munitions Industry, Witnesses Declare

Chester, Penn., April 26.—Some of the inspectors employed by the Russian government at the plant of the Eddystone Ammunition Corporation, where 129 lives were lost by an explosion on April 10, were radical Socialists and had voiced their disapproval of the ammunition industry, according to testimony produced at the inquest to-day into the disaster.

While conflicting views as to the cause of the explosion were expressed by the various witnesses, many incidents pointing to attempts to wreck the plant were detailed. Witnesses told of finding matches wrapped in waste under oil tanks; a blackened match head among broken powder pellets and pieces of steel in the black powder of the shrapnel shells. Joseph Dydra, a Russian inspector, testifying through an interpreter, told of finding the pieces of steel on numerous occasions in the shells when he was testing the amount of powder with a gauge. Nicholas Klekner, one of the chief inspectors for the Russian government, who expressed the view that the explosion had been accidental, admitted that he had been a Socialist, and that some of the inspectors under him held radical views. Officials of the company and Dr.

Francis D. Patterson, of the State Bureau of Industrial Hygiene and Engineering, expressed the view that the explosion could be traced only to a sinister origin. A copy of a telegram sent to a radical Russian newspaper in New York on the day of the explosion by James Waskoff, an inspector, which read, "Explosion occurred; our crowd safe," was introduced into the testimony by C. J. Brodt, a detective, who said that all trace of Waskoff had been testified that he had interviewed Waskoff in New York and was satisfied that he was not involved in the catastrophe. Louis Herman, a guard on the bulkhead along the Delaware River at the plant, testified he had fired six shots at occupants of a motor boat he saw in the river two days before the explosion. He said they were acting suspiciously. "You'll be blown up before night," one of the men on the boat shouted, the witness said. It was stated that it had been learned the men in the boat were innocent of evil designs against the plant. Girl Told of Plot Mrs. Maude Fell Wiedner, of Woodlyn, a former inspector in the fuse department, said she was told by Julia Bryan, a girl employe, that the plant would be blown up the Saturday before the explosions occurred.

Captain Walter M. Wilhelm, vice-president and general manager of the corporation, declared that the concern's investigation had also brought out the fact that match heads had been found in shells at other munition plants. "We learned that a plant at New Castle, Del., had found match heads in the base of shells," said Captain Wilhelm. "The same thing applied to the American Can Company."
