What a stop-watch test told The Tribune about its headlines

A NEWSPAPER is made to be read, and its headlines are made to give you its news at a glance. With those two ideas in mind, The Tribune recently changed its headlines to make them the most easily read headlines in New York.

It experimented with many kinds of type and many kinds of eyes. It held stop-watch tests with people whose vision is normal, with near-sighted and far-sighted people. With eyes of all kinds,

Words Printed in This Type were easier to read than WORDS PRINTED IN THIS TYPE

Finally a type was selected which, after all these experiments, proved to be 15 per cent easier to read than the capital letters usually used in newspaper headlines.

This is just one more instance of the way The Tribune has been working out one detail after another to produce the most complete New York newspaper.

12,000 Books Sent to U. S. Army in Siberia

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6.—American books and magazines are aiding the American troops in the Vladivostok region to while away the long Siberian winter. The American Library Association announced today that since last June, more than 12,000 volumes have been sent to Siberia from San Francisco and the Philippines.

Woolly Cows in Arctic Zone With butter at its present altitude there will be special interest in the statement that Vilhjalmur Stefansson has discovered a high latitude cow. It is a woolly cow, a cow of the musk variety, but neither its wooliness nor its muskiness is any drawback to its lactical usefulness.

Teachers Poorest Paid Class of Brain Workers The spirit of liberty, equality, fraternity is embodied in our religious institutions, but we have yet much to do in order to embody it adequately in our educational systems.
