

Sir Oliver Lodge, the eminent British scientist and psychologist, arrives in New York for a series of lectures in America upon the subject of communication with the dead. Sir Oliver says his trip was approved in communications from the "other side" by his son, who was killed in the war. International

Nine "pretty" (according to Underwood's caption writer) Manhattan maids, entrants in the recent golden slipper contest at the Café de Paris Cinderella ball. The lady in the middle, Miss Violet McMillan, of musical comedy fame, won the coveted smaller-than-No.-1's. Underwood

"Big Boss" Bowman, of the Pershing Square group of monster caravansaries and other big hotels over the country, returns from abroad in time to witness the final five star funeral services of the late lamented (very much) John Barleycorn. International

The greatest little money maker of all the movie queens made a flight above the clouds the other day out Los Angeles way and now she won't be happy till she's the proud possessor of her own plane. Stick to terra firma, Mary—we can't afford to lose you. Rudel & Herbert

Her dad announced last week he couldn't take Poincaré's job as President of France—Mme. Clemenceau-Jacquemair, daughter of the "Tiger." Mme. Jacquemair has been extensively entertained during the last few weeks on her visit to New York. From a new photograph. Wain

'Ello, 'ere's Captain Bruce Bairnsfather, just in from the old country for a lecture tour of three weeks on "Old Bill and Me." Captain Bruce, creator of "The Better 'Ole" and one of England's most famous caricature artists, will also tell of his experiences with the doughboys. Kristine Van

A new photograph of Governor-elect Edwards, of President Wilson's home state, who has been accused by the "drys" of winning through the aid of the "wets." The picture, made in Jersey City, shows Mr. Edwards talking things over with a little girl pal and her dollie. Rudel & Herbert

Grouped about his coffin, a sad band of true-to-the-last mourners drink a farewell toast to the late (and dear) departed, one John XXX Barleycorn at a "wake" held the other evening up at Reisenweber's. Father Knickerbocker is still holding his head as a result of the orgie of that thirst quenching that preceded the "zero hour" last week. International

Reducing the high cost of toothache among New York school children—a scene in the city's public school dental parlors, where the masticating apparatus of young America is given proper attention by a battalion of instructors, nurses and students from the Columbia Dental College. Rudel & Herbert

Another bit of evidence in support of the Darwinian theory—the hands of man and monkey compared. One hand belongs to Lieutenant Locklear, the daredevil aviator; the other to a famous chimpanzee belonging to a California motion picture concern. Can you determine which is which? Underwood

We're all becoming daily more intimately acquainted with the water wagon—but here's the water tank car—made necessary in Norfolk because of a serious shortage of drinking water. A line of Norfolk citizens are shown waiting to draw their daily family allowance of five gallons. Sprinkling carts and water boats are aiding in the distribution. Underwood
