Miss Mona Bates Gives Recital in Aeolian Hall

Concert Put on Par With Many Others Held There Since Last Fall

Miss Mona Bates gave a pianoforte recital in Aeolian Hall last night. She is, perhaps, the eightieth or ninetieth, or even hundredth, young person in this department who has asked the landlords of her friends (who cannot correctly say in judgment of the public since the season began last October) if it were possible to represent numerically the sum of the gifts and attainments of all these players and then divide that sum by the number of players the dividend would in a manner declare the ability of each one of the numerous hosts and therefore indicate the measure of Miss Bates's talents.

General devotion to art, the choros by Saint-Saens on ballet airs from Gluck and in the Sonata op. 53 ("Waldstein") by Beethoven, so seemed to us that she had to play them. Her teacher had taught her, but though this was an agreeable feature of her playing, and laudable, the additions were not all happy.

'Miracle Play' Wins Praise in Premier Here

Musical Story of "The Pilgrim's Progress" Is Impressively Presented by the Oratorio Society

Two Changes in the Cast

Miss Vera Curtis Takes the Place of Miss Garrison, Learning Part in 24 Hours

Edgar Stillman Kelley's "musical miracle play" "The Pilgrim's Progress," with text arranged from Bunyan's story by Mrs. Elizabeth Hodgkinson, was given for the first time in New York last evening at the third concert of the musical festival by the Oratorio Society at the Army of 71st Regiment. The work had its first performance anywhere at the Cincinnati Festival in May, 1918.

Mrs. Hodgkinson has arranged her story in three "acts of plays" and seven scenes, retaining much of Bunyan's language for her text. In the first act, the pilgrim hears the voices of Doom crying in the air, the voice of the Lord coming. After listening to the exhortations of the Evangelist, he receives the encouragement of the Celestial Voices and the Armory of God. Thus strengthened he enters the Valley of Humiliation, where he meets the fiend Apollyon, whom he overcomes in single combat.

Temptations of Vanity Fair In the second part of "act" Christian meets with the temptations of Vanity Fair. The tradesmen offer him diamonds, Mr. Money Love and Mr. Worldly Wiseman and Mr. Money Love advise him to desist from his journey. Atheist seeks to shake his faith and Mrs. Bubble seeks to practice upon him her sorcery. When he spurns all their beguilements, he is driven out from the vicious city.

In the Delectable Mountains, to which Christian has fled, he is joined by Hopeful and the celestial voices in singing of the goodness and beauty of His Kingdom. This encouraged, Christian crosses the river and reaches his goal. Here he is greeted by the Angel with the benediction, "Blessed are They That Do His Commandments." The gates were opened for him, and Christian and Hopeful are greeted with the full chorus chanting, "Well done, good and faithful servants."

Judicious cuts were made last evening and at the composer's request the part entitled "The Delectable Mountains" was omitted in order to bring the time of the work within reasonable concert limits.

Mr. Kelley is well known as a musician of sound training and solid achievement. He already has to his credit an opera, "Abdullah," and a "New England" symphony and other works. And, inspired by Bunyan, he has written warm-blooded and melodious music. He is a member of the American Guild of Music and has written charming pastoral pages in "The Valley of Humiliation," where peace is dispelled by noisy fiends, chronically ill, who are used in rhythmic patterns to typify the pulsating life of the city. The work, where Mr. Money Love and Mr. Worldly Wiseman sing in the sprightly vein of operetta. Only Mrs. Bubble's part is a full concert, but her musical utterances being merely those of a conventional siren. The choruses in this work are particularly spirited. The work closes in a high vein of spiritual exaltation, with gifts of passages for the heavenly host and the celestial chorus.

The performance was impressive and animated. There were two changes in the cast. Miss Mabel Garrison, who had taken ill, was replaced by Miss Vera Curtis, soprano, of the Metropolitan opera company, who learned her part, the Angel, in twenty-four hours. The part of the Shepherd Boy was sung by the boy soprano, Master Edel, instead of by Mme. Marie Sundelius, as originally announced.

Werrenath Work Praised Reinold Werrenath did valiant service as Christian. He was effective in declamation and his fine performance easily awakened the sympathy of the audience for the pilgrim and his tribulations. Lambert Murphy, too, who has had long experience in oratorio, gave character to the contrasted characters of the Atheist and the Evangelist. Mr. Patton's Apollyon was convincing and dramatic, while Mr. Tittman and Mr. Daddario, in their parts, gave excellent vocal portrayals of Money Love and Worldly Wise Man. Mme. Clausen, like her music, was the conventional siren. The other voices were well-behaved and golden-throated. Small errors of the neighborhood, saved by the solemnity of the occasion, were the comic faces and chanted solo of the great voices of the choir, reinforced by the orchestra, swept through the hall in magnificent unity.

Mr. Kelley should have been pleased with the honor done his work. After "Vanity Fair," he stepped onto the stage and was presented with a wreath. Then a flashlight was taken.

Actor's New Home Burns

YORKTOWN, N. Y., April 9.—Fire of unknown origin destroyed a new country residence just completed for Halbrook Binn, actor, in his summer place, "Journysend," today. Firemen who arrived from Ossining saved the older Binn residence after a half-hour's work. The new house, forty feet away, had set fire. Mr. and Mrs. Binn were on the place when the fire started and helped to fight the flames. Jimmy Skunk Becomes a Wanderer

How blessed to be free of care; To wander here and wander there. But still more blessed 'tis to know You have a home to which to go.

Jimmy Skunk was homeless. Anyways, that is the way he felt. Of course, he wasn't truly homeless, because he had the old house he had lived in for a year. But a house isn't always a home. No, indeed, a house isn't always a home. That is the way it was with Jimmy. With Mr. Skunk gone, it wasn't a home at all, it was just a place to sleep.

Mr. Skunk had left Jimmy with the possession of the old house Johnny and Polly Chuck had left up in the far corner of the Old Orchard. She had wanted Jimmy to keep away. She had told him that she didn't want to see him about it. It had hurt Jimmy's feelings greatly, because he really was very, very fond of her. But he couldn't understand it. But he heard Mr. Skunk's warning and kept away from the far corner of the Old Orchard.

Being lonely, Jimmy took to wandering about a great deal. Sometimes he came home to sleep in his old house

He discovered that old Mr. Toad had come all the way from Farmer Brown's Garden down to the Smiling Pool and sometimes he didn't. He became something of a tramp, sleeping wherever he could find a hole or a comfortable dark place. He visited the Old Pasture and looked for fat beetles there. He wandered all over the Green Meadows, digging out white grubs from the grass roots and thus being of real service to Farmer Brown, though he didn't know it. He even went way over to the shore of the Big River and made a good dinner of a dead fish he found there.

Horse Aid Society Head Held in Bail On Larceny Charge

Mrs. Stella Ehrlich, Accused of Stealing Four Poodles, Makes Denial; Is Bound Over to the Grand Jury

Mrs. Stella Ehrlich, president of the Horse Aid Society, was arraigned in the Morrisania Court yesterday on complaint of Morris Buckbinder, a sign painter and dog fancier, of 363 Rock Avenue, the Bronx, and was held in $500 bail, charged with grand larceny, pending action of the grand jury.

Buckbinder in his original complaint charged Mrs. Ehrlich with taking from him six dogs, worth $800. In court he admitted that the woman had taken only four dogs and that three of these were worth $35 apiece and the fourth $100. He also admitted that he had taken six other dogs to the Horse Aid Society stables for training.

He testified that on March 14 Mrs. Ehrlich, accompanied by two men and a woman, went to his shop and asked if he had any dogs for sale. She was told that he had not, Buckbinder said, but she nevertheless went to a rear room and took away four dogs, threatening to have the man arrested if he protested.

William Smith, of 75 Southern Boulevard, corroborated the complainant's testimony. In her own defense, Mrs. Ehrlich said that on February 21 Buckbinder brought to the society's stable a poodle and a bulldog, both suffering from skin disease. Three days later he brought four poodles, all blind and thin. He called on her to take them than go into trouble. She said he agreed with her and himself helped her get the animals in her automobile. One of the poodles died next day and she returned the other three to Buckbinder on a court order. George Bery, her chauffeur, corroborated her testimony.

Mme. Van der Veer Sings Well-Chosen Program Given at Aeolian Hall Recital

Nevada Van der Veer gave a song recital at Aeolian Hall yesterday afternoon. Her voice, an opulent mezzo-contralto, is excellently suited to the expression of primitive emotions, love, joy, grief, religious exaltation. It was frank, straightforward singing, with few half-tints, intelligently directed and warmed by emotion.

The program was well-chosen. The sacred numbers, given by Mme. Van der Veer with impressive fervor, included Bach's "Et Exultavit Spiritus Meus," Handel's "He Shall Feed His Flock" from "The Messiah," "People Victorious" from Horatio Parker's "Hora Novissima," and Kurt Schindler's arrangement of "Eli, Eli."
