

THE CORNELL-DARTMOUTH FOOTBALL GAME at the Polo Grounds a week ago yesterday, as viewed from the air. Some thirty-three thousand gridiron enthusiasts packed the famous stand 'neath Coogan's Bluff to see the "Big Green" team take the Cornellians' number to the tune of 14 to 3.

© Fairchild A. C. C.

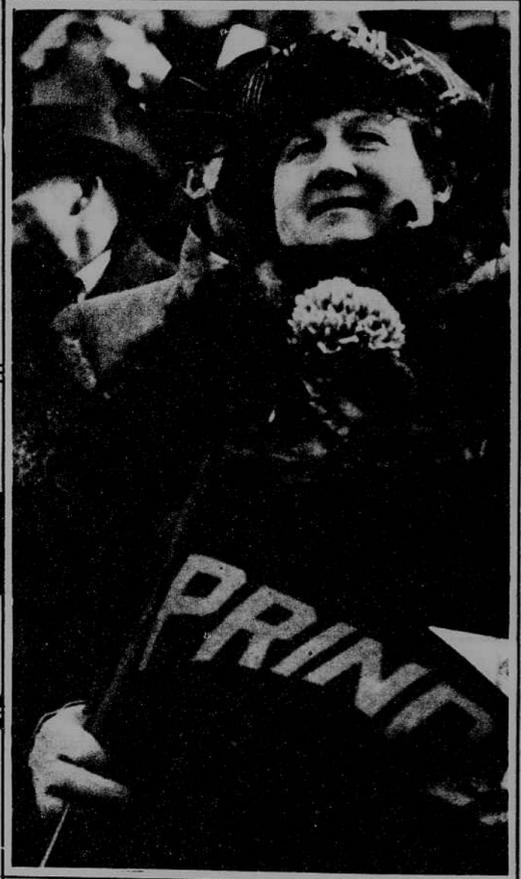

DOBBIN RIDES ON HIS OWN CAR. One of the few oldtime horsecars still in active service in the United States operates on a steep hill just outside of Denver. When faithful Dobbin finally gets to the top of the grade with his dinky four-wheeler in tow, he is permitted to be a straphanger on the coast back.

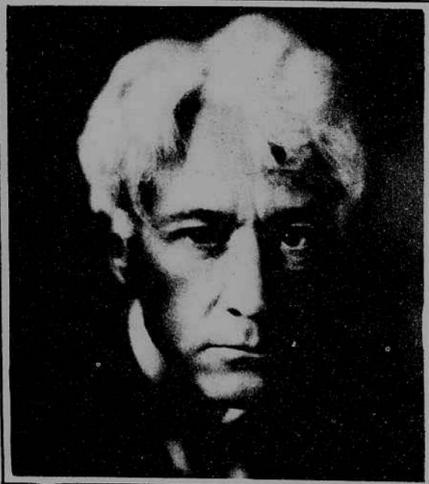

BEAUTY AND THE BEAST. Only in this case the Beast is a reptile, one of the Bronx Zoo snakes, and Beauty is pretty little Roma Billo, who just had to show the Girl Scouts who visited the Zoo last week that at least she had one qualification for membership in their organization—she wasn't afraid of snakes.

LOST—ONE ELECTION BET. Cheerful mourners surround Thomas Monahan, an undertaker of San Jose, as he reposes in full public view for twenty-four hours in one of his own caskets in Golden Gate Park. San Francisco—the result of an election bet made and lost on Governor Cox.

MRS. CALLAHAN'S PREDICAMENT. A week ago yesterday Mrs. Mary E. Callahan, of Lawrence, Mass., cheered for Princeton to win over Harvard. But yesterday, when Princeton played Yale in the Palmer Stadium, she had to remain strictly neutral, for she is the proud mother of the brothers Callahan, who played opposite each other in the lines of the opposing teams in yesterday's struggle, the greatest of their football careers. Her boy Mike is captain of the Tigers and another son, Tim, is leader of Old Eli's eleven.

Right—"UNCLE" JOHN SHELL, of Greasy Creek, Ky., and his five-year-old son. Doctors are to examine "Uncle," who is 131 years old, in an endeavor to discover his health secret. The venerable record-breaker is remarkably active. He remembers the death of Washington in 1799 and was rejected because of his age for Civil War service in 1860.

Right—AN OWL THAT WASN'T WISE. This great white "bird of wisdom," with a five-foot wing spread, was captured by John Steele, skipper of the fishing schooner White Cap, of New York, when it alighted recently on the mast of his vessel, some thirty-five miles out at sea. It was too tired to fight or fly away. Look for it soon in one of our Zoos.

JUDGE K. M. LANDIS, of Chicago, who has been tendered, at a salary of $50,000, the position of chairman of the tribunal which will govern all the leagues joining the new baseball organization, to operate under the Lasker plan for civilian control.

© McGet from International

Right—MOST PERSHABLE OF ALL MILLINERY MODELS. The Aristolochia Grandiflora, of the Lincoln Park Conservatory, Los Angeles. The rare blossom, a cool and light bonnet for the little miss in our picture, is far from durable, wilting overnight.

Keystone

Left—BASEBALLS OR DUCKS? Ty Cobb, famous Detroit outfielder, evidently can handle a shotgun equally as well as a baseball bat, judging from this double cluster of gamebirds recently brought down on a California hunting trip. The Georgia Peach has been playing a series of fifteen exhibition games on the Coast.

International

