Attack on Validity
Of Federal Boards

State of Texas Charges Interstate Commerce Commission and Labor Body
Are Unconstitutional

AUSTIN, Tex., June 11.—The Texas Attorney General's department announced today that the Supreme Court of the United States had granted its request to file a suit attacking the constitutionality of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the United States Railroad Labor Board. The Supreme Court informed the department that subpoenas had been issued to the two organizations, requiring them to appear before the court. The suit was filed June 6, the announcement said.

Texas, in the suit, prays also that all acts and orders of the Labor Board and Interstate Commerce Commission be declared invalid and without force of law, and that if any section of the transportation act of 1920 be held constitutional, the remaining sections be declared invalid.

An order is asked "restraining members of the two bodies from enforcing rules and regulations that conflict with internal affairs of the State of Texas, its constitution or the constitutional rights of its citizens."

The announcement by the Attorney General's department said the suit was submitted to the Supreme Court in conformity with the Federal law requiring states to file suits before that tribunal.

Attorney General Cretton will represent the state before the court.

In the action the State of Texas sets up the plea that the Labor Board and Interstate Commerce Commission are without constitutional or statutory authority and prays that the two bodies be adjudged illegal. It pleads that all laws or parts of laws directing the creation, appointment and other qualification of members of the defendant organizations be declared void.
