

Nearly 12,000 In Columbia's Summer School

Registration on Opening Day Insures Largest Institution of Kind Ever Organized in This Country

Real Convocation To-night Social Features Scheduled for Almost Every Evening of Six Weeks' Session

An army in checked gingham and dotted swiss took possession of the Columbia University campus yesterday morning with the opening of the summer school. There were men visible here and there in the long bright-colored lines which wound through the north grove as the candidates waited their turn at the registration booths in the gymnasium, but they were virtually lost in the hosts of school-marks and would-be school-marks from Copper Prairie and points south.

When the registration clerks wearily closed their books last night there was a total of 8,742, not including those who registered by mail and so avoided the tedious process of registering in the gymnasium. To-day's late figures are expected to bring the total well up between eleven and twelve thousand, the largest summer school this country has ever seen.

There were 3,361 registered yesterday alone, as compared with 2,947 on the corresponding date last year. All classes of former pupils began yesterday, but the general convocation exercises will not take place until to-morrow evening. George Barclay Parsons, president of the university trustees, will address the convocation in the gymnasium.

Social Features Interesting To-night the students will gather for the first evening concert in the grove and from this time on, practically all the social features of the school will be something of social interest, from trips to the famous sights of Broadway to get-together parties of the state clubs, of which there are thirty, to the summer camps for geography students through the Adirondacks and White Mountains will follow the summer school.

The bulk of the students are taking academic or professional education courses, but many are here to refresh up in the classics, undergraduates from small colleges working for their degrees and school principals and superintendents studying the latest theories in school management.

Something new in summer school students, however, made its appearance on the campus yesterday with the arrival of a business management school. Plans for the future of this field include courses in gas engineering and the industrial uses of alcohol. Men who could not, and would not, leave their business management studies for their work at college, are expected to avail themselves of the opportunity for six weeks' study in the quiet summer season.

N. Y. U. Registers 2,000 New York University's summer school opened yesterday with a registration of 2,000. Special attention will be paid this year to the courses in practical business affairs, such as retail selling and business management. Courses are to be given at the college on University Avenue, and the business and professional courses at Washington Square.

Registration began also for the children in the New York City public summer schools, but these will not open for work until next week. Two hundred and fifty vacation playgrounds were opened yesterday.

The Tribune Fresh Air Fund

To-day's Fresh Air vacationists invade three states. Those first off are to take possession of the Naugatuck Valley in Connecticut. They leave Grand Central at 9:45 for Derby, Seymour, Waterville and Thomaston, where the clocks are made. All told there will be eighty-six of 'em.

This is all virgin territory for Tribune "Fresh Airs." It may be all the more pleasant for them on that account. A suggestion as to the spirit of their prospective hosts and the kind of entertainment those hosts plan to provide for their guests may be gleaned from the letter which follows:

"These families all happen to be members of the Episcopal Church, but it will make no difference to any of them what the children may be—Jew or Gentile. They would like white children, or at least children that will turn white upon the proper application of soap and water."

Plenty of Time for Play "This is a country place and the hope the hostesses of these children will let them dig worms, roll on the grass, pick flowers and get generally mused up, at least for a good portion of each day. They will be bathed and washed miserably—so they may look sweet and pretty from just before supper until bed time."

It's All Right. Let me know when to meet our guests. Look for an Episcopalian clergyman with black hair and no hat at the station—that's me.

"W. A. WOODFORD." The party to get off second also takes its departure from Grand Central, leaving at 10:35 to occupy a more extreme northern section of Vermont, or more specifically, the villages of East Fairfield and Sheldon. Thirty-eight go into this group bound for the Green Mountains.

They've a long trip before them, but one full of wonders for their untraveled eyes. They will see the Hudson in all its glory. They will see the Catskills, with a glimpse of Albany, get the glimmer of Champlain's waters here and there through the trees, and then on into the heart of the mountains.

This part of Vermont, too, is new Fresh Air territory, but the number of invitations coming in from the region proves that it is going to be good soil for the Fresh Air children.

Next to leave New York will be a party of eleven children, who are to go by way of the Lackawanna to Waverly, N. Y., an old Fresh Air wintering place.

Last Party Goes to Utica The last party of the day goes to Utica, N. Y., to be distributed among the farmers of Oneida and Lewis counties. Forty-seven boys and girls leave the Grand Central in this group at 11:10 for the terminus of Albany. They have made arrangements to meet a group of youngsters, one of The Fund's oldest cooperators.

The total of outgoing vacationists for the entire day will be 187. Adding the children who are coming in to begin vacations last week and still in the country—The Fund by nightfall will have on its hands as guests 1,750 boys and girls.

A physical teacher and a lass who needs a change from the city, a respite from the conditions of his tenement home, but who would be utterly unable to get it without the aid of The Tribune.

Most of these children got away from New York by July 2, and so escaped the worst part of the terrific hot spell which reached its climax on the 4th and 5th. Following the children of what The Fund is doing for the totts of the tenement sections and showing their approval in the best of all ways—by giving their money to help and buy clothing for the children of the tenement sections. Yesterday's gifts to The Fund amounted to $2,519; those of last Saturday, $3,349.15.

The total of contributions for the summer season is now $100,000. The remaining five-sixths ought to come. A full budget means vacations for 15,000 boys and girls.

The Fund has 25,000 waiting to go. Will you send one or more of them? Seven of your dollars buys two weeks of the country for one—and you can pay for as many as you please.

Money Given to Date Contributions to The Tribune Fresh Air Fund, acknowledged, $113,619.54. A. J. B. 100.00, C. J. B. 100.00, D. J. B. 100.00, E. J. B. 100.00, F. J. B. 100.00, G. J. B. 100.00, H.
