Wee Pneumonia Patient on American Legion Survives Quick Trip to Hospital, Where Crisis Is Expected

Whole Ship Waits on Him Voyagers Bring Word of 80-Mile Bloodless Battle in Revolution in Paraguay

Thomas H. McConnell Jr., ten months old, who was brought ashore yesterday from the Munson Line steamship American Legion suffering from pneumonia and whose fight for life was seconded for a week by the efforts of all the vessel's passengers and crew, was reported last night at St. Luke's Hospital to have a fair chance of recovery and to be none the worse for his ambulance trip from the pier to the hospital.

From the day the baby, whose father is assistant general manager of the Ford agency, Buenos Ayres, and former major in the army, became ill the comfort of the other ninety-nine passengers and the ship's routine were voluntarily subordinated to his needs. After being the primary requirement of the little sufferer, a hospital was rigged up on the port side of the main deck, where Louis Weir, the ship's surgeon, and the ship's nurse watched over him day and night. Electric pads to keep his body warm were attached to wires connected with the dynamo room.

Major McConnell returned to the United States with his wife, his daughter, Virginia, and the baby for a business conference and to his relatives. Passengers from Paraguay told of witnessing an opera bouffe revolution in which a gunboat engaged in a running duel with a party of insurgents who had mounted a gun on a flatcar on a railroad siding paralleling the Rio Paraguay. The combatants pursued each other for eighty miles, it was said, without either side registering a hit. Finally, a party of government soldiers landed and took up the attack, and when the train was thus forced to come to a halt the gunners on the war vessel were enabled, by a lucky shot, to place shell within fifteen feet of the train. The insurgents thereupon decided that the affair was becoming too serious, so they canceled the revolution, quit their cars and took to the woods.

Heavyweight Fighter a Stowaway

One traveler on the American Legion brought in was not on any of the passenger lists. He was William Ware, negro pugilist, whose sporting sou-briquet is "Rough-House," and he came as a stowaway, despite the fact that he is able to boast of intimate acquaintance, as a sparring partner, with Jess Willard, Jack Dempsey, Jack Johnson and others.

Last May Ware went to South America with Louis Firpo, heavyweight champion of Latin America, after helping Firpo in his work here. "Rough-House" signed a contract for 200 pesos a month to be Firpo's sparring partner in the south, because a friend told him that a peso was worth two or three American dollars. When he got to Brazil, however, he found out that swapping blows was the only kind of

Farmer Brown's Boy Goes Fishing

By Thornton W. Burgess

The catch to fishermen most dear is always made with eye and ear.

—Farmer Brown's Boy.

Early one morning Farmer Brown's Boy started out for the Green Forest, and as he tramped along he whistled merrily. This was to be a holiday and Farmer Brown's Boy was going fishing. He was on his way to the Laughing Brook to fish for trout. He dearly loves to fish, does Farmer Brown's Boy.

Now, catching fish isn't all of fishing. No, indeed, Farmer Brown's Boy will tell you that. Of course, he likes to catch some fish. But even when he catches none at all he has a good time. It is the things he sees and hears and does that interest him. So Farmer Brown's Boy, through the Green Forest and out on the Green Meadows that bring to him the real joy of fishing.

He began near where the Laughing Brook starts, deep in the Green Forest. The trout were not hungry. Pool after pool he visited without so much as a bite. Each time he was a little disappointed, but each time he felt that at the next pool he surely would catch a trout. Once he caught a glimpse of a trout. "Ha, you scamp!" said Farmer Brown's Boy. "I guess you have caught all the fish. Anyway if you haven't caught them I guess you have frightened them so that they have lost their appetites." You see he knew what a good fisherman Billy Mink is.

At the pond of Paddy the Beaver Farmer Brown's Boy stopped to see what Paddy was about. He hoped he might see Paddy. But no, no, no, sir, he didn't get a glimpse of Paddy. The fact is Paddy wasn't at that pond at all. He was taking his summer vacation and had gone exploring. But Farmer Brown's Boy found other things that interested him quite as much. He found the fresh tracks of Buster Bear in the mud at the edge of the pond. He found a footprint of Yowler the Bob Cat. He found a slippery slide made by little Joe Otter. He found the footprints of Lightfoot the Deer. All these things interested him, and he almost forgot that it was to catch fish that he had come over there.

exchange in which he qualified as an expert, and that at current rates it takes about 280 pesos to make even $100. Added to that, he discovered that Firpo expected him to endanger his two rows of expensive gold-filled teeth in exhibition bouts, which was more than his sense of propriety and judgment could stand for.

No Divorce; I'll Stick to Flo, Says Billie Burke

Declares Report Marilyn Miller Caused Break in Marital Affairs Is False

Special Dispatch to The Tribune
YORK HARBOR, Mo., July 24.—Billie Burke, wife of Florenz Ziegfeld, declared today, in the most emphatic manner, that there was nothing to the report that Marilyn Miller has caused a coldness between herself and Flo. "It is absolutely untrue," said Billie. "There is no work of any kind. Mr. Ziegfeld is coming back to America, but it's not because of anything Miss Miller may have said. I have not the slightest intention of leaving him. I am not going to ask for a divorce no matter what the papers say."

In this connection, it was reported, that Ziegfeld has decided to recall Dorothy Dickson, danseuse, actress and songstress, from London, where she has been playing the title role in "Sally." It is said here that the recall means Ziegfeld will drop Miss Miller from the cast of "Sally" and when the play resumes at the Colonial Theater in September, Miss Dickson will be seen in the title role.

WASHINGTON, July 24.—Pressure was relatively low to-night over the middle Atlantic states and the plateau region, and it was high over virtually all other sections. There have been scattered thunder showers within the last twenty-four hours in the Atlantic states, Tennessee, the middle Missouri Valley, the southern plains states and the Rocky mountain region. Elsewhere generally fair weather has prevailed.

The weather became cooler to-day in the southern lake region and in the Atlantic states north of Maryland, while there was little change in temperatures in other parts of the country.

In the lower lake region, the Ohio Valley and the north Atlantic states the weather will be generally fair, with moderate temperatures, to-morrow and Wednesday. In the middle Atlantic states it will be mostly cloudy and cooler to-morrow with a probability of showers in southern Virginia and generally fair with moderate temperatures, Wednesday. In the south Atlantic and east Gulf states and in Tennessee the weather will be partly cloudy, with scattered thunder showers, to-morrow and probably Wednesday.

District Forecasts.—Eastern New York and eastern Pennsylvania.—Generally fair to-day and Wednesday, with moderate temperatures.

Southern New England.—Cloudy to partly cloudy Tuesday; Wednesday fair; moderate temperatures.

New Jersey and Delaware.—Cloudy Tuesday; Wednesday fair; moderate temperatures.

Eastern Pennsylvania and western New York.—Fair Tuesday and Wednesday, with moderate temperatures.

So Farmer Brown's Boy hung the trout on the limb of a tree about six feet from the ground

Now, Farmer Brown's Boy was fishing with artificial flies. These are made with bits of feathers and silks and are swung on a tiny hook in such a way that they resemble certain kinds of flies that are found on the water. Very carefully he cast his fly so that it fell on the water just where he had seen that trout jump. Hardly had it touched that trout when out came that trout again. He had been fooled. Yes, sir, he had been fooled with that fly. He thought it was a real fly.

But he found his mistake. Yes, sir, that trout found his mistake. There was a hook in that fly, and right away he was in trouble. Buck and forth and round and round in that pool raced that trout. But all the time Farmer Brown's Boy kept a tight line and that trout couldn't get away. When he was tired out Farmer Brown's Boy gently drew him ashore, and his eyes shone as he looked at his beautiful prize.

"There's one trout that Billy Mink won't have," said he. "My, how good will taste! I haven't had a taste of trout for so long that I have almost forgotten what it is like. Now, if I can catch three or four more we will have trout for supper to-night. I don't want to take this along with me, and as I am coming back this way I will just hang it on a tree here in the shade and get it on my way back."

So Farmer Brown's Boy hung the trout on the trunk of a tree about six feet from the ground, and went on his way down the Laughing Brook.

by a fluke or any species of a flim-flam, it is better far to lose, even if it be to lose big. An experience of years as merchants leads us to say this emphatically.

Was "Good Queen Bess" Really Good?

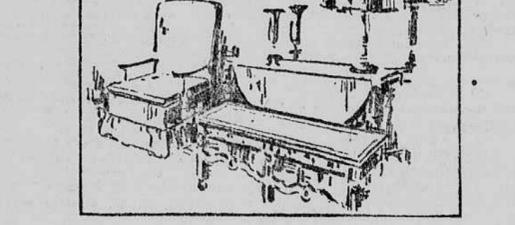

A historian gives 10 years of his life to searching out "The Private Character of Queen Elizabeth"

There is no lasting benefit from anything received by falsehood or fraud. It means muddle-headedness to undertake it and shows the lack of a ruler.

By Frederick Chamberlain, L. L. B. '95. Was Queen Bess really good? Was she queenly? What of her qualities of mind? Her attainments? Her appearance? We learn with a shock that during most of her life she wore a wig, being quite bald at 30. Was she a flirt? What, not after these years of legends about Sir Walter Raleigh and the Earl of Leicester! If she was not a flirt, what was her ruling passion?

That five years were consumed by determining the single question of the Queen's health are but one bit of evidence of the care and scholarship with which the volume has been prepared.

The Wanamaker August Furniture Sale

Does not compete in price—but in Price PLUS Quality

Competition in price alone leads to the production of imitation furniture—something that on the surface looks as good as something else, but which has been cheapened in the construction so that it will not give satisfaction. Keep a sharp eye for such furniture! It is very conspicuous these days in the advertisement of August Sales. The cheap price will prove a dear price later because the furniture will not stand up.

For instance, a dealer takes a Martha Washington table, of standard form, to a manufacturer and says "copy this at a price." The manufacturer under orders cheapens the table to a dangerous point; cheap wood, glued joints, careless and hurried cabinet work. When finished and varnished the table may look like the genuine solid-construction table—but oh, the difference when it is carefully examined and used! The cheap table is then advertised as an instance of the low prices in that particular furniture sale—a delusion and a snare. Don't be guilible enough to be snared into imitation furniture. You will be sorry.

Wanamaker furniture is genuine through and through. We simply will not meet competition on the imitation kind. We will not sell that grade of furniture. But on the serviceable grades of furniture we are keen for the hardest competition the retail market offers. When you see a price on anything lower than at Wanamaker's you may reasonably be sure that it is imitation furniture. Avoid it as you would poison.

TOMORROW, WEDNESDAY, the Wanamaker August Sale will be in full swing, with Days of Courtesy on which selections may be made, transactions and deliveries to begin August 1. Reductions in price range from 10 to 50 per cent., the average being about a third.

The writer has himself just completed a tour of inspection of all the furniture as it is spread out and tagged on the four galleries—fourth, fifth, sixth and eighth—and with an experience of more than 20 years critically examining and writing about August Sales, he is free to say that he has never seen one so attractive as this, in variety, quality and value.

Take time to study the BELMAISON reproduction furniture on the fourth gallery—a collection of individual pieces each true to its original. All reduced 10 to 40 per cent.

And look over the office furniture on the seventh gallery; the entire stock there is also reduced 10 and 15 per cent.
