Singer Spends $3,000 at Exhibition of the Italian-American Association

Members of the Italian-American Arts Association, who are holding their first exhibition of art and craft work at the Civic Center, 14 West Twenty-first Street, received the stimulus of their organization's young life when Benjamin Gigi, Metropolitan Opera singer, walked in and spent $3,000. Gigi and his wife visited the exhibition yesterday, and without at first revealing his identity the singer bought seven paintings from among the striking things on view. These were a landscape by Signor Manduca, a portrait by Signor Pizzotta, an impression of New York by Signor Sarno, a painting by Signor Mira and another by "Master De Rosa," Signor Di Filippo and a Venetian landscape by Signor Francesco Zirielli, a ship caulker, who exhibited his first two pictures.

Lackawanna Club Cars Offer the Traveler Every Comfort

In Early Railroad Days

THE American railroad, highly developed as it is today, came from very humble beginnings. The first trains were nothing more nor less than stage coaches on tracks. Until 1834 horses and sometimes stationary engines furnished the motive power.

If you sat inside, you were crammed into unbelievably close quarters. If you sat outside, you were subjected to a constant stream of smoke and sparks from wood-burning locomotives. The first sleeping cars did not come until 1858. Steel rails were not in general use until 1864 and Pullmans did not make their appearance until about the same time.

There is a wide contrast between these conditions and the real luxury of a first class railroad of the present time. Speeding over the Lackawanna by night in a steam-heated, electric-lighted Pullman, or comfortably seated in a Lackawanna Parlor or Observation car, just a step away from a comfortable Diner, one cannot help but reflect upon the hardships to which those early travelers were subjected.

Lackawanna service, offering you comforts and conveniences equal to those of your own home—including news and entertainment by radio—affords a striking illustration of American progress and achievement.
